BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 5, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

Our advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 18th Dec.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 16th Dec.

As regards Burma, the Times Correspondent telegraphs from Calcutta, under date 3rd inst., that the annexation proclamation has been generally well received, that the arrangements for the internal administration (probably involving the division of the country into two commissionerships) are under consideration, to be decided by the Viceroy in person when he visits Burma about the end of this month. Though the Province is not likely to pay its way for some years (as the introduction of civilised Government and the keeping in order of the turbulent border tribes will involve some expense), the deficit is not expected to be heavy, and there is no reason to doubt that at some future date Upper Burma will be not only self-supporting, but highly prosperous.

We have received the following telegram from the India Office:—

"From Chief Commissioner, Mandalay, Jan. 4.

"Prendergast reached Bhamo. Cordially received by Burmese officials, who had kept place quiet, also by Chinese merchants. No opposition on river. Prendergast leaves garrison at Bhamo."

Satisfaction continues to be expressed at the removal from power of the Tynedah Mengyee.

THE Indian Budget was introduced by Sir A. Colvin on the 4th inst., and gave occasion for a speech from the Viceroy on Indian affairs generally, of which, on account of its unusual importance, we give a full abstract:—

Sir A. Colvin began by saying that the recent reductions of taxation were fully justified by events, as the last three years had shown an average surplus of £700,000 annually; but the period of plenty had now ended. The fall of one penny in the exchange and the increased military estimates would cause a heavy charge, of which, however, all but £700,000 would be forthcoming on the ordinary estimates, owing to the improved prospects in respect of Customs, railway receipts, and opium.

He proposed an extension of the license tax to meet the deficit. Of those now paying, 122,000 would remain untouched, the contributions of 100,000 would be slightly increased, and 80,000 new payers would be added, including the official and professional classes. He estimated that the tax would then fall upon 300,000 persons.

The Viceroy then spoke, and delivered one of the most eloquent and impressive speeches ever heard in the Indian Council. He publicly and solemnly assumed the responsibility for the financial measures now proposed. The deficit, he said, arose from causes over which the Financial Department had no control, they being due to the policy forced upon the Government by external events. The chief cause was to be found in the preparations necessary for a great possible conflict with Russia. At home war was considered so imminent that even that most pacific Ministry of Mr. Gladstone had called out the Reserves, and equipped the fleet, at a cost of £8,500,000. No one would dare to suggest that while the English taxpayers were subjected to so severe a strain to preserve the integrity of England's Eastern Empire, India should stand with folded hands and do nothing. Precautionary measures had been taken with the most rigid economy. In fact, they had been confined to the laying down of the commissariat and stores for a single corps d'armée on the frontier. Had any Indian Government done less it would have deserved impeachment.

The Viceroy then turned to the Burmese question. He said that the action of the Government had been approved by the Ministry, and, so far as was known, by English public opinion. It was true the Native Press had objected; but the special facts of the case were unknown to the Native Press. The annexed districts were for the present placed under the immediate direction of the Viceroy; but he hoped to elaborate a more regular administration after making personal inquiries at Mandalay.

Passing then to Sir A. Colvin's proposal, the Viceroy said that he was well aware of the objections to direct taxation of Asiatics. But it had now existed for some years in the form of a license or income tax. The only alternative was the salt duty, which was a reserve that might fairly be drawn upon in case of war, famine, or great financial difficulty. But before drawing upon that reserve the license tax should be so extended as to reach the classes best able to pay, and profiting most by the security of British rule.

Lord Dufferin proceeded next to consider the new position of India with relation to the European political world. The area of our political influence and responsibilities had now brought India, he said, into direct contact with one of the greatest military Powers. He had confidence in the wisdom and pacific intentions of the Czar and his Government. He also believed that the Ameer desired to act fairly with us. But we had entered into engagements with the Ameer, which, while he acted faithfully, would compel us to resent any infringement of his territory. Collisions between nations depended upon accident as well as upon fixed policy. The presence of the Ameer in the Viceroy's camp at Rawul Pindi had alone prevented the Penjdeh incident from giving rise to the risk of a great war.

The Viceroy added:—

"We should be neglecting the teachings of the past, and be traitors to our obvious duty in the present, if we did not put the frontier in an adequate state of defence. We must bar the doors against all comers, and all danger of intrusion from without."

The precautionary measures, proceeded Lord Dufferin, consisted first in frontier and strategic railways; secondly, in frontier fortresses and strong places; thirdly, in additions to the British and Native forces—the additions sanctioned by the Indian Government being less than those urged by the late Commander-in-Chief.

With the view of supervising closely each branch of outlay, he proposed to issue a Financial Commission, so constituted as to leave no possible doubt that the Government was determined to perform thoroughly, conscientiously, and efficiently the task now before it.

THE Pioneer sounds the first note of the widespread dissatisfaction which, as the Times told us some time since, exists in India regarding the non-appointment to the Military Membership of the Viceroy's Council of an officer possessing such exceptional qualifications as General Chesney, whose nomination to the post has all along been regarded as a foregone conclusion:—

If ever (says our Allahabad contemporary) there was a case of the kind in which the absolutely unexpected has happened, this is emphatically one. Within the last few months rumour had designated half-a-dozen men for the post, but these were mere stray shots and regarded as such, so confident was the feeling abroad that General Chesney, the late Military Secretary, would be selected because, as it seemed, he must be. Not that General Chesney was ever altogether a persona grata in high places. He held unfashionable opinions too strongly; he pushed reforms, that he knew were pressing, with, from the view of his own interests, reckless persistency; he was impatient of sloth or stupidity—was apt at times to argue with a spice of almost "cussedness" in his official correspondence, and despised the arts by which men ingratiate themselves with men. But then his ability, his experience, his originality were so exceptional; he had done such splendid work as executive head of the Military Department in four or five campaigns; he was so distinctly indicated as the man to assist the councils of the Indian Government in its vast military business of the future, whilst his technical claim was so unassailable, that it was believed no selection made with any decent regard to the public interests could possibly go beyond him. That General Chesney, as it is known, neither sought, nor desired, nor indeed expected, the appointment, is beside the question. He longed for lettered ease. But the Republic grudges her veterans the laurels won in any battle-fields but her own.

Our latest news of the Afghan Commission consists of two items from St. Petersburg. On Jan. 1st a report from the Russian Afghan Boundary Commission, dated Maruchak, Dec. 24th, arrived at that capital. The English members of the Commission were about to proceed to Charsambe, where they will remain during the winter. At Maruchak the ground is covered with a great depth of snow, and the temperature during the morning hours falls four degrees below the zero of Fahrenheit.

On the 3rd, the Times is informed that:—

The correspondent of the Moscow Gazette with the Russian Afghan Frontier Commission sends an account to his newspaper of the cordial relations and good understanding prevailing between the members of the English and Russian Commissions. Describing the hospitality on both sides, he states that at the dinner return given by the English representatives large bonfires were lighted all along the route between the two camps, and he adds that the Cossacks have expressed their feelings in the usual way by tossing one of the English officers into the air. The Benga Lancers returned the compliment upon a Cossack officer amid great amusement.

We hope our Foreign Office will not neglect such strong hints of the probability of future mischief in lands debateable as are conveyed in the following paragraph from the Times. Russia has her hands free, she wants to utilise Persian territory for more purposes than one, and she may consider the time opportune to pick the usual quarrel, and to extort her own terms as the price of peace:—

Official news has reached St. Petersburg to the effect that on the 26th of November last (O. S.) Persian nomad tribesmen to the number of 5,000 crossed the Russian frontier, and took possession of pasture land within Russian territory. On December 1 there occurred a collision between a body of mounted nomads and the frontier police.

By the way, it was announced the other day that the Russian Government are about to increase their Consular staff in British dominions. Calcutta, Liverpool, Hull have all been selected for the honour of receiving a Muscovite representative. Why is not a corresponding move made on our side? Why not insist on re-establishing the Consulate at Tiflis? Why not require a British Consul, or Consular Agent, or representative of some kind to be received at Tashkend? Now that Mozaffer-ed-din is gone, the Russians are going to lose no time in establishing a Political agency, dragoman, escort, and all, at Bokhara. The thin end of the wedge!

THE visit of the "Indian delegates" to England seems, if it benefited no one else, to have benefited them by opening their eyes to fact. We find with pleasure the subjoined in the Indu Prakash, the editor of which paper (as is well known) is, or was, a delegate:—

For India it does not much signify whichever party remains in power. The chance of having Lord Ripon as our Secretary of State had inspired a desire for the success of the Liberals, but even if the Conservatives continue in office we have no reason to fear any mal-administration from Lord Salisbury and Lord Randolph Churchill. If the present Secretary of State continues in office there is one cherished wish of all India which, we may be sure, will be fulfilled. There is, on the other hand, the danger of an increase in military expenditure, but against that we may trust our Liberal friends to help us.

It is natural to find the Native papers exercised about the annexation of Burma, which was expected by them, though as yet not announced. Some of their ideas are singularly crude. We have space for a few only:—

Lord Randolph Churchill has distinctly said that the British Government intends to annex Burma for the benefit of English capitalists and English merchants. But at the present moment the English ought to carefully consider the present and future of India. There can be no comparison between the North-Western and the North-Eastern frontiers, but there can be no doubt that a great deal of money will have to be spent for the defence of the latter. Our blood curdles when we see the amount of money spent in the Afghan war undertaken by Lord Lytton.—The Nababibhakar.

The British Government once publicly announced that it had given up the policy of annexation. But the same Government is now going to extend its territory by conquering Burma, by consolidating its influence in Nepal, by turning wistful eyes on Kashmir, and by effecting a change in the administration of Bhopal. We wish that the Government would make it publicly known whether it intends to pursue a simple policy of this nature. Surrounded as the Government is with enemies on many sides, we do not wish to say what will be the result of the policy it is now going to adopt. In times of danger people are generally influenced by their evil genius. Probably the Government of India has been so influenced.—The Someprokash.

We are unaware whence the Saravi and Pataka got the idea that India is in danger from China! However, this is what it says:—

Many shrewd politicians imagine that, on account of the complications with Burma, the English will very soon be involved in a quarrel with China. In our humble opinion India is in greater danger from China than from Russia. It is matter for deep regret that the English have adopted a suicidal policy towards both Afghanistan and Burma. The independence of the kingdoms west and east of India should be maintained, and the English Government should ally itself with them. The frontiers of India would then be safe.

FROM the first, the Camp of Exercise has been the reverse of popular with the Native Press. Expense is at present their bugbear. They see it in the annexation of Burma, oblivious of the fact that British Burma has for years relieved the taxation of British India by contributing its handsome surplus to the general exchequer; they see it, and nothing else, in the evolutions to be performed at the Camp of Exercise. Thus the Someprokash:—

It has been arranged that every European Power shall send representatives to the Camp of Exercise. Russia is going to send Professor Minaeff, who is a well-known Sanscrit scholar, and who came to this country some time ago. Although India is terrified with dangers from many sides, and the treasury is empty, the authorities cannot give up the habit of wasting money unnecessarily. They imagine that the prestige of the Indian Empire will be enhanced by the unnecessary waste of money. It has become a chronic disease with the Government of India to throw money away.

Native Opinion gives the following sensible advice to Native Rulers. In commenting upon the Viceroy's speech at Ajmere it says:—

It is now quite necessary, if the Native Princes wish to hold their own, that they should thoroughly understand what they are. They must forget that they are the descendants of powerful governors and great commanders, and as such have a privilege of remaining idle at the expense of others. They must realise their responsibilities, and be men of the nineteenth century, and not demigods of the war world. It is this truth that Lord Dufferin inculcates in his address with striking eloquence. He tells them to be good men and true, and to be careful how to be of use to others. He tells them also to learn and cultivate the English language, and there can be no two opinions as to the utility of this last advice. It is only with reference to certain dangers that are apt to meet one in his study of not only the English literature, but of western knowledge generally, that we wish to caution our princes. Persons in less unfavourable positions than themselves have, on account of their having picked up an imperfect education, become victims to vice from which our people were conspicuously free. There is, again, that contempt for everything old, and that senseless rage for indiscriminate imitation, which often has caught hold of a young reader of Milton and Scott. We should be much grieved to see the Princedom of India becoming, on account of western education, addicted to drink and similar other vices, or becoming the admirers of the outward habits of Europeans. We should like them to imitate the inward European. We should like to see them become as manly, as industrious, and as straightforward as he is. But we should deprecate that mere love of dress and drink, that empty show of foreign manners, which characterises the half-educated. Notwithstanding their English education our Princes will do well not to forget that they are the sons of India, and that it is their duty not to copy England, but to improve their country.

THE Englishman publishes the text of the agreement by which Scindia recovers the Gwalior fortress. We much regret to see that one of the details to be arranged after the conclusion of the treaty involves the payment by Scindia of the cost of the removal of the troops from Gwalior and Morar, and the increase of the allowance for the maintenance of the subsidiary force. As if fifteen lakhs for buildings which the Maharajah does not need were not enough to be mulct in for the privilege of re-entering on his own! The whole thing seems to have been done in the worst possible "form."

ON this point the Indu Prakash writes reasonably enough, at the same time advocating the undoubted claims to similar treatment of Holkar (of whom we have elsewhere spoken) and of the Nizam:—

The restoration (says the Prakash) has been made with a loud flourish of trumpets, but, with the conditions attached, it seems to be a doubtful gain. However, we must not scan too closely what must after all be deemed an act of generosity. While the Government is in this generous mood let us press the claims of their Highnesses the Nizam and the Holkar to similar treatment. The rendition of Berar to Hyderabad and of the promised provinces to Indore would be an act of greater generosity and justice than the one with which we have been greeted now. Let us hope Government will not be slow to deal justly with these other feudatories who stood as bravely and steadfastly by the side of the British in the hour of trial as his Highness of Gwalior, and remove the causes of their complaint and dissatisfaction.

We congratulate the Calcutta Liberal on having, it would seem independently, found out what we mentioned some time since, that Conservatives have shown the truest sympathy with Indian rulers. We quoted, too, the very instance now given by our contemporary :—

It is (says the Liberal) interesting to observe that the two most signal instances of rendition of their States to Native Princes have been made under the auspices of the Conservatives. Mysore was restored to Native rule by Lord Cranborne, now Marquis of Salisbury, and the fortress of Gwalior returned to Scindia by Lord Randolph Churchill. On the other hand, the question of the Berars came to be considered by the Liberals and Conservatives both, and it is still dragging its slow length along.

We have received the following notice from the India Office :—

On and after 1st February 1886, Pay, Pensions, and Annuities will be issued at the India Office, without proof of existence being required, in those cases in which payment is made under Power of Attorney to Bankers who may have signed the guarantee required by the Secretary of State.

This concession does not extend to payment by means of Draft negotiated through a Banker, to Pensions to Widows and Children from the several Indian Provident Funds, including Lord Clive's Fund, nor to special Pensions granted to Widows and Children.

In future, Military Pay will be issued Quarterly on the 1st February, 1st May, 1st August, and 1st November, instead of the 8th of those months respectively. When the proposed date shall fall on a Sunday, payment will be made on the 2nd, and if the Bank Holiday should fall on the second August (as in the present year) payment will be deferred until the 3rd of that month.

THOS. W. KEITH, Accountant-General.

CERVANTES laid down that an old mouth without teeth is the best for backbiting.

WHEN will someone write a book on the vagaries of English prepositions? We had a few the other day, here is another: French Visitor—"I call to see Monsieur Rollard." Maid—"You can't see him, sir; he's not up yet." French Visitor—"Vat you tell? I come yester, and you say can't see heem because he not down; now you say can't see heem because he not oop. Ven vill he be in ze middle, mademoiselle? I no compr'end!"

JUDGE, to a twenty-time convicted recidivist—"Your profession?" "State prisoner, Mon juge."

WE remember a clergyman at Happy Ryde who had three times adopted, and as often abandoned, the Roman Catholic creed. But it was not reported that he had tried a third form of religion. So Dhuleep Singh must have beaten him after all, for we read:—"The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, who has abandoned Christianity and turned Mahomedan, is coming to reside in Delhi after squandering a large fortune at home."

A CHANGE.—"What a change," says the novelist, "one little woman can make in a man's life?" "Exactly," says a victim; "and what a lot of 'change' she requires while doing it?"

A SHOEMAKER.—At a book sale a copy of Drew's "Essay on Souls" was knocked down to a shoemaker, who, to the great amusement of the assembly, innocently asked the auctioneer if he had "any more books on shoemaking to sell?"

L'ENFANT terrible again! "Johnny," said his father, as the boy took a biscuit from the plate, "don't you know that it is unpolite to help yourself before your elders?" "Why, pa, mother told me to help myself before you." "What do you mean?" asked his father; while his mother looked up with astonishment in every feature. "Why, I heard mother tell Aunt Hannah that she hoped I wouldn't take after you, and so I thought I'd take my biscuit first."

"You say he called you a donkey?" "Yes." "What did you do about it?" "Nothing." "Well, if a man should call me a donkey I'd kick him with both feet." "Certainly, any donkey would naturally do that."

THE Curate (to Mrs. Stubbs, who wishes to be thought well of by the new curate): "So you were born here, Mrs. Stubbs, married here, and have lived here all your life, and I suppose you hope to die here?"—Mrs. S.: "Yes, sir, please God if I live."

"WHAT IS MATRIMONY?"—A priest, who was examining a confirmation class in the South of Ireland, asked the question, "What is matrimony?"—A little girl at the head of the class answered, "Tis a state of torment into which souls enter to prepare them for another and better world."—"Put her down to the fut of the class," counselled the curate.—"Lave her alone," said the priest; "for anything you or I know to the contrary, she may be pairfectly right."

"Is there any kind of coat that never has any buttons on it?" asked a mission teacher of a class of newsboys. "Yes, sir; a coat of paint!" was the instantaneous reply.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The chord struck at the late elections still vibrates in more than one article in the present number. Mr. Traill's "Plague of Tongues" denounces an evil which, ever since the ill-omened days of Midlothian, has been growing in size and ponderosity—which Lord Beaconsfield aptly characterised as "irresponsible chatter." Irresponsible with a vengeance! For, as it is said in Yorkshire that an otherwise honest man will cheat his own father about a horse, so do we find men, blameless in all non-political relations of life, prepared on the platform absolutely to deny that they ever used words which they are well known to have uttered.

An "ex-Liberal M.P.," as though addressing an "Experienced meeting," lays bare his heart, and shows us the reasons which have led him to perceive that the interests of the Empire are superior to all other considerations, even to the administration of the Government by one party rather than by another, and must be paramount. This may be called Jingoism, or, as the writer sensibly enough styles it, Imperialism, as opposed to Gladstonianism, to which he gives its real name, Parochialism. Every reader should study this article, which deserves much more than a casual perusal. We suspect Mr. Keibel's series of Papers now collected, as a "History of Toryism," had not a little to do with our ex-M.P.'s conversion. He could not have had a better godfather.

Captain A. C. Yate's account of Persia, viewing that country as a possible ally of England, and showing the great value to us of preponderating influence there—which is precisely what we have not got—suggests many memories of opportunities cast to the winds, and many dubious anticipations for the future. Captain Yate points out the difficulties Russia would experience in Afghanistan with a hostile Persia on her flank. He shows, too, that, with Russia gradually undermining and disintegrating the Mahomedan world, our obvious policy is to unite with Islam in opposing the southern progress of the Northern Power, matters which might with great national advantage be perpended in Downing-street. Mr. Sibbald's account of the Turkish army "as it was" deals, perhaps, too much with the past, and is chiefly valuable as indicating by inference what can now be done to restore the tone and efficiency of the Ottoman forces.

Mr. Mallock's serial, "The Old Order Changes," sustains the interest of the opening chapters; Lady John Manners records in a pleasant style her late Electioneering campaign with Lord John; Mr. Swann gives us the "Land Problem" from an American point of view; and we revert to the irrepressible politician in a very well-written notice, with which this capital number closes, of "Mr. Gladstone's latest Manœuvre."

A DICTIONARY OF ISLÁM†

The increased attention paid to Oriental matters is beyond doubt a sign of the times. Twenty years ago, interest in the East was confined to a few students and men of letters—now a "Dictionary of Islám" is produced as a commercial speculation—it may be hoped as a profitable commercial speculation. Few persons, perhaps, have a clear notion what the production of such a work involves. First of all as to the labour on the part of the author; it is not too much to say that the time spent in collecting the materials for such an elaborate "Catalogue raisonné" of every dogma, every measure, every ceremony, every belief, every doctrine in the Muslim world, must be reckoned rather by years than months. Admitting that the Rev. T. P. Hughes, whose name has for a lengthened period been a household word as regards all that concerns the religion founded by the Prophet of Arabia, started with the not inconsiderable advantage of deep, almost unsurpassed, knowledge of his subject, still his work abounds at every turn with quotations, involving boundless research and endless study. Over four thousand explanatory articles, many of them lengthy and intricate, while but few are simple and straightforward, cannot possibly be produced with ease and rapidity, and it seems astonishing that a Missionary in the East, with duties which are anything but a sinecure, could, in the midst of disputations, discussions, preaching, and teaching, find time to prepare a compilation so laborious, and produce a series of essays so toilsome. It is no fulsome adulation to express the conviction that, long after the worthy author has passed away from the scenes of his earthly toils and struggles, the "Dictionary of Islām" will remain a monument of his untiring zeal and unflagging energy, and many a follower in the path of research will mutter over his grave that blessing on the head of the master-mind which rendered simple and interesting a branch of study but little pursued, and threw light upon many a difficulty in the path of Oriental theology. What the appearance of so bulky a volume, abounding in prints and Oriental type, must have involved, as far as the publishers are concerned, it is impossible to estimate. The expense must have been enormous—we should have thought absolutely crushing. To criticise such a book is almost hopeless. To do so would involve a learned dissertation, wearisome alike to writer and reader. We will confine ourselves, therefore, to a brief exposition as to the use and value of the work. Take, for instance, the word "Husband." Few persons know that the evidence of a husband concerning his wife is not accepted by the Sunnis, but is allowed in Shi'ah law; fewer then, perhaps, are aware that a Muslim wife (one, that is, of four) may bestow her right as to residence with her spouse to another more fortunate charmer of the number. Again, to quote another instance, we venture to assert that not one educated person in a thousand, even amongst the few who have studied Orientalism, is alive to the fact that the name of Isrāfil, the angel of death, is not once mentioned in the Qur'ān, or the traditions which explain it. To quote further illustrations would be easy, but space precludes the attempt.

It is obvious that the value of such a task as the "Dictionary of Islām" is its accuracy. Upon this point Mr. Hughes's reputation is a sufficient guarantee that what is written is written accurately. We have examined a large portion of the work with critical care and attention, and but one error have we discovered—page 12. "Akhir-i Chabār-i Shambah"—that is, the last Wednesday of the month of Safar, is clearly inaccurate. At page 127, head "Feast days," it is correctly rendered Alchir i Chabār Shamba. The letter "i," or "izafat"—the sign of the genitive—should not be introduced between Chabār and Shamba, while, though admitting scholars differ as to the advisability or otherwise of transliterating the "little h" by the Roman "h," it is obviously inexpedient to render the same word on two different occasions by varying equivalents. Trifling as is the oversight in this case, it is the sole fault we can find. Welcome and praise are the only words at our command in criticising a book both profoundly learned and intensely interesting—the work of a scholar, as learned as he is unpretentious, as unbiassed as he is conscientious.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.*

The present number of this very interesting magazine continues the Victoria Cross Series, on the present occasion narrating in simple and forcible language the gallant deeds of Admiral (then mate) C. D. Lucas, Lieutenant (now Colonel) G. D. Dowell, R.M., and Captain of the Mast George Ingouville. Of the two former portraits are given, as has been usual throughout the series so well selected by Major Elliott; and, while by no means holding an implicit belief in the doctrines of Lavater, we cannot help advising some believer to examine the faces of all who figure therein, and to find out—if he can—what common characteristic they may possess.

An article on the origin of the "Slav, Serv, and Slavonic Races," by Doctor Anton Tien, admirably illustrated and ethnologically instructive, but also very interesting from many points of view, betokens wide and deep research on the part of its author. It conveys a great deal of information in a pleasant style, and is, perhaps, the pièce de résistance of the number.

The magnificent vessels of the British Merchant Navy are further described and depicted by Major Cooper; yet, gaze on them with admiration as we may, it is difficult to avoid a kind of unpleasant fascination which induces us to turn our eyes to the French gunboat Acheron (p. 26), waspish-looking, with a "villainous sting" in the shape of a 10½-inch gun, mounted en barbette on a turret. The soldiers, as well as the Generals, of the Civil War are referred to in the valuable series of Papers contributed by Major Walford; and one cannot help contrasting with a period, when all soldiers were practically volunteers, the position, even now but quasi-military, occupied by Volunteers in the present day, and which it has cost such men as Lord Bury (whose life, with portrait, will be found at p. 27) and Lord Wantage—both, by the way, Conservatives—so much trouble to achieve for them.

We cordially endorse every word said by the Editor in praise of the invaluable United Service Institution, a really handsome Government grant to which would be money well laid out; and have also to thank the same writer for bringing prominently to notice inventions applicable to the Services. Many of these, both in the present, and in previous, numbers, well deserve attention.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

In this number we, duce Colonel Malleson, accompany Prince Eugene of Savoy down to the period when, in 1712, he lost, owing to the change of Government in England, the companionship in arms of the Duke of Marlborough and thence onwards to the treaty of Rastadt in 1714.

The sneers about Sir C. Warren's bloodless campaign and "military promenade" are well refuted by one of Methuen's Irregular Horse, who, under the nom de plume of "One of the Force," conclusively shows that it was, on this occasion, not l'audace only, but commissariat arrangements, on the whole good, a well found army, and, above all, a very skilful and discreet leader, which made the Bechuanaland Expedition so brilliant a contrast, both as to its complete success, and as to the butcher's bill, with the operations in Egypt, in which an army of some 30,000 men achieved, at the cost of a fearful loss of life—nothing. We shall begin to think that we have one, besides the "only other, General."

"Wellington College," the subject of the next article, by Staff-Surgeon Dickinson, will interest it numerous alumni, who have added in the field to whatever reputation they may have acquired under Dr. Benson and his successors; while Mr. Marvin's paper on "England's Railway to India," strongly advocates the completion, even now, of the Euphrates Valley Route—a proposal respecting which, with the Russians at Kars, opinions may fairly be held on both sides. "On Leave" and the "Captain's Yarns," the latter unusually interesting, go to make the new year's number of the Magazine a particularly good one.

OBITUARY.

SIR WALTER MEDHURST.

Few are now left us. But of the old Consular service in China, to whom we owe, in so large a measure, our present footing in that country; and the death of Sir Walter Medhurst, which occurred at Torquay on Dec. 26th, diminishes the number of the survivors.

Sir Walter had retired from active service in January, 1877, after thirty-seven years of continuous labour in the trying climate of China, having begun as a mere youth in the Chinese Secretary's office in 1840, in the early days of our first struggle with the Celestial Empire, which only terminated on the Treaty of Nankin in August, 1842. Unappalled by the difficulty of the language, he had, in 1842, made such progress in it, that he was amongst the first Consular interpreters employed. It is difficult to overrate the responsibility attaching, in such exceptional circumstances, to such a post. After having been attached to Sir Henry Pottinger's mission, and having been also at different periods with our garrisons and troops in the field, he was appointed, in October, 1843, interpreter at Shanghai, where Captain (now Sir George) Balfour was the first Consul. From that date he was actively employed as Vice-Consul and Consul at several ports in succession, rendering valuable service in all, and from 1850 to 1853 he acted as Secretary and Registrar to the Plenipotentiary and Chief Superintendent of Trade. Sir Walter Medhurst was specially distinguished by his fluency and command of the Chinese language, no less than by a natural suavity of manner and evenness of temper under the most trying circumstances, which won upon Chinese officials and subjects of all ranks to a degree that not only gave him great influence, but rendered him one of the most successful of interpreters. As Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghai, where the most numerous and important of the foreign communities reside and the largest interests are at stake, his services were so fully appreciated that, on his retiring, the whole foreign community joined in testifying their sense of his merits and their regret at his loss by presenting him with a service of plate. Her Majesty's Government were not less ready to acknowledge their approval and satisfaction, as testified by the honour of knighthood conferred upon him on his return to England.

As a contemporary justly remarks:—Few officers in this division of the Consular Service—which has been made special in view of the important functions they are called upon to exercise, a knowledge of Chinese being now considered indispensable—have rendered better service to their country, although three among the number have passed from the Consular to the Diplomatic Service and become Ministers Plenipotentiary at Peking.

EMPRESS-DAY HONOURS.

THE names of those whom the Queen has, on this occasion, "delighted to honour," are printed in another column, and this will be eagerly scanned, the Gazette being, to some at least of the décorés, the first intimation which they will receive of their good fortune.

The list does not call for any special remark. Many of those who figure in it are well known to Anglo-Indians, and opinions will hardly be divided as to their merits, though we do not see why Syud Burghash of Zanzibar, who has usually been amenable to advice, and has, on the whole, cordially supported us in putting down slavery, should not have been deemed, as well as Syud Toorkee of Muscat, a fitting recipient for the G.C.S.I. Only one British officer gets a, well-earned, Knighthood, Colonel (now Sir John) Bateman-Champain; this is, however, not a K.C.S.I., but a K.C.M.G.

We cannot help thinking that the tendency to consider the C.I.E., specially designed to reward literary merit, as a sort of alternative decoration to the C.S.I., is to be deprecated. It seems anomalous that the Viceroy's Military Secretary, the Commander-in-Chief of Bhopal, and the commandant of the Punjab Rifle Volunteers, should not have been awarded the latter order. Their nomination to a literary order throws into the stronger relief the names of those whose undoubted literary merits have procured their admission to it. Mr. A. N. Wollaston is, we believe, the first member of the India Office who has received this decoration by way of honorific recognition of distinguished achievements in many branches of Oriental literature, and for proved literary ability; by common consent he has well earned it, and we heartily congratulate him on the possession of so marked a distinction.

ANNEXATION OF UPPER BURMA.

THE brief proclamation, of which we elsewhere publish the text, which announces the incorporation of Upper Burma into Her Majesty's Dominions, comes not a moment too soon to dissipate a feeling of uncertainty, which was injurious alike to British interests, to British reputation abroad, and to the Burmese people, whose future was chiefly at stake.

The development of events, both before and after the fall of Mandalay, seems to have been such as to give unmistakable indications which was the proper course to pursue. A captive King, the absence of a suitable successor had one been desirable, the ready, nay, eager acquiescence of the people in our assumption of the Government, all conspired to make clear the path which it thenceforth became the duty of the Imperial Government to follow.

Never was a proceeding better justified, never was one received with more general approval. Mercantile communities at Rangoon, Bombay, and Calcutta, will be jubilant, while a decision, which might have been more promptly announced, will be readily accepted abroad. We have not to wait long for the first note of approval, the last words of which may be pondered with advantage by the "Parochialists" of this country. The Français, commenting on the annexation of Burma, says :—

We wish we could dispute the not very charitable boasts of our neighbours, but, alas! none of our objections to the conquest of Annam apply to the English annexation of Burma. Trade preceded the British flag, and follows it; the territory annexed joins the Indian Empire; and if a vast expanse of sea separates it from the mother-country, there is a free space for the British flag from Mandalay to the mouth of the Thames. The affair had been long so well prepared, and has been so well carried out, that it imposes no extra expense on the ordinary budget of the Indian Empire. Lastly, the expansion of the rule of England in the Far East, so far from paralysing her influence in the Old World, constitutes the strength of her diplomacy in European councils.

That German opinion will run nearly on the same lines there can be little doubt.

Much has been written on the claim to Bhamo, said to have been preferred, but as yet, so far as is known, not formally advanced, by the Chinese. That it may not, from military considerations, be wise to surrender Bhamo itself is probable enough; but that it is advisable to meet the Chinese more than half-way we have already expressed our opinion. The question, also raised, whether Burmese intercourse with China was, centuries ago, conducted on terms of equality, or of inferiority, seems to us, just at present, to border rather on the academical than on the practically useful.

HOLKAR.

HOLKAR, or rather The Holkar*, "the man of Hol," has played a conspicuous part in Central Indian affairs. Not only is he the second chief in importance in Central India, but he has occupied the throne nearly forty years, sufficiently long to have left a lasting impression on, and to have given a permanent direction to, the administration of the State. During this considerable period his administration, if not absolutely faultless, has, mainly on account of the personal interest which he takes in it, been vastly superior to that of most Native States, and he has, on the whole, carefully followed the counsels of successful British Residents. Nor should it lightly be forgotten that he was the first Native Ruler to place, during the recent crisis, his troops at the Queen Empress's disposal.

* The name is derived from his ancestral village of Hol, "kar" being equivalent to "wallah," "the man of Hol."

Khunde Rao Holkar, his immediate predecessor on the Gadi, died early in 1844, leaving no lineal heir, and the right to the throne of an adoptive heir, even had Khunde Rao made a valid adoption, had not been "recognised" by the Government of India; a circumstance which, under the very narrow construction of Native customs as to adoption which prevailed in pre-Mutiny times, and which was so largely utilised by Lord Dalhousie, was held to place the State at the disposal of the Suzerain, to be resumed or regranted according to the circumstances of each individual case. As regards the Holkar family, it was thought proper to declare that the nomination of a successor belonged solely to the British Government, and the Resident at Indore (Sir Robert Hamilton) was instructed to make a selection "in such a way as to show that it was manifestly the sole act" of the Governor-General in Council.

Sir Robert, passing over the nominee of the Chief Ranee, the Mah Sahiba, made his choice of the present Chief in pursuance of this authority; though somewhat exceeding his instructions by installing the object of his preference as "hereditary" Maharajah. Years elapsed, and Sir Robert, who held a high opinion of the young Chief, was on leave in England when the Mutinies of 1857 convulsed India, his substitute being the late Sir Henry (then Colonel) Durand. A considerable portion of the State troops, following the example of our own Sepoys, revolted. They besieged the Residency, and Durand, with some difficulty, retired, with the European women and children, to Bhopal, fully persuaded that the Chief was, passively, though not actively, concerned in what had happened at Indore. This conviction of the Holkar's complicity seems never to have left him; and there is little doubt that it was chiefly due to this circumstance that, when territorial rewards were assigned, with no stinted generosity, to other Native rulers, Tookjee Rao's conduct was held by Lord Canning such as to debar him from participation therein. Sir R. Hamilton, the permanent Resident and Governor-General's Agent, urgently pleaded for him that all inquiry had failed to discover any proof whatever of the Maharajah's acquiescence in the conduct of his troops, though it had brought into the clearest light his utter inability to restrain them; but he pleaded in vain, and Durand's appointment to the more influential post of Foreign Secretary was not likely to facilitate the task of obtaining a reconsideration of the matter.

Holkar's conduct on the occasion of the outbreak at Indore has been warmly discussed. Kaye distinctly expressed his opinion that the Maharajah was wholly innocent, and was simply sacrificed to save Durand's reputation. It is not necessary to add this corollary. On the contrary, though Holkar was, as we think, innocent, yet no less was Durand sincere in his assurance of guilt. Colonel Malleon's account of what happened on the eventful 1st July, when Holkar's revolted troops seized the Residency, seems eminently impartial, and even judicial, in its tone.

The first discharge of grape into the Residency, 1st July, took place between eight and nine; the garrison evacuated the Residency at half-past ten. What was Holkar doing during these two hours? There is no doubt but that he was aware of the nature of the events which were taking place.

"Here we are met by opposite opinions. On the one side it is hinted, if not asserted, that he was watching the turn of events, not caring to interfere on behalf of the British until it was certain that their sun had not set. On the other it is declared that, in acting as he did, he was unswerving in his loyalty to British interests, that had he mounted his horse and ridden to the scene of action his presence would have sanctioned the Mutiny, and given stability of action to the revolted soldiery, that in every case he would have been powerless to control them. There is force in this argument. Looking at the question as a whole I am of opinion that Holkar was free from complicity with the mutineers, that his soldiers had slipped out of his hands, that his presence among them on the 1st of July would have been misinterpreted, and that subsequently he did his best to serve British interests."

Entertaining, as we do, a conviction that Tookjee Rao's claims to territorial reward were valid, and were sacrificed to a mistaken impression, which might not unnaturally be entertained by one whose life was very nearly sacrificed at a time when the Chief had it not in his power to hold up a finger to protect him, we should have rejoiced had Lord Dufferin, during his recent visit to the Maharajah, found himself able to remove his host's long-standing feeling that he has unjustly been left unrewarded. The recent management of the State, in which the Chief is known to govern as well as to rule, and the revenue of which he has in forty years raised from fourteen to seventy lakhs, abundantly shows that an increase to his "talent" would not be misplaced; he has shown his ability to use those confided to him. On this point we could wish for no higher authority than that of Sir Richard Temple. "Holkar," says this statesman in his 'Men and Events of My Time in India,' "is probably the best man of business among Native Princes whom this generation has seen. He received, when young, a sound practical education under European supervision, and acquired early a fondness for public affairs. . . . His diligence in auditing the accounts of his governments and regulating his finances is remarkable for a Native Prince."

Nor is it easy to avoid the conviction that to "give the go-by" to a wholly unsupported accusation, dating, too, nearly thirty years back—to let bygones be bygones—would be, not merely justice, but enlightened policy. At a period when the Central Asian question is really, so to speak, shifting its ground from Europe to Asia, words are not needed to prove that it is politically expedient, by a liberal act of condescension—in itself a sign of conscious strength, and which must redound to our credit—to remove the ban hitherto placed on Holkar, and, by giving him the territorial extension which, in ordinary circumstances, he would have received as a matter of course, to show our entire confidence in the loyalty and good-will of so important a Feudatory.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterized by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 25th Dec.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 23rd Dec.

TELEGRAPHING on the 10th inst. the Times Calcutta Correspondent says, that the representations of the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce as to the prevalence of dacoity in Burma, which, it was feared, might endanger the rice trade, had been sent to the Viceroy, and that meanwhile the local authorities were acting with "vigour and promptitude." There can, however, be little doubt that the quiet of Upper Burma is assured, as Mr. Bernard, the Chief Commissioner, was to return to his headquarters at Rangoon on the 15th inst.

THAT the annexation of the country would give rise to differences of opinion in the Press was to be foreseen:—

The Anglo-Indian newspapers (we read) are all but unanimous in their approval of the annexation. The Calcutta Englishman considers that no other course was open to the Government; the Indian Daily News of Calcutta and the Pioneer of Allahabad express similar views. The Lahore Civil and Military Gazette believes that the annexation will pay, and says that Upper Burma only needs a civilised Government to attain great prosperity. The Times of India, of Bombay, thinks that the annexation is the best, if not the only remedy for long existing evils. The Bombay Gazette assumes that the Government has strong and special reasons for its decision. The Madras Mail says that this bloodless triumph will aid England to resume its proper place among the nations.

The Calcutta Statesman, on the other hand, describes the annexation as an unjustifiable breach of international law. The Native newspapers, with few exceptions, also condemn the step. The Bengalee deplores it as a blunder of the gravest magnitude. The Indian Spectator thinks that a protectorate would have been better. The Reis and the Rayet suggest that the war and the annexation were dictated by international jealousy and commercial and political greed, and that in Native opinion the annexation was a mistake. There are, however, some exceptions to this chorus of disapproval, the most notable being the Muslim Herald, which congratulates the Queen on this rich addition to her dominions, and believes that prosperity and happiness will be the result.

It is now stated that Thebaw will not be sent to Raniput after all, but to Ratnagiri, the climate of which place is believed to be more suitable.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST has reached Bhamo, and we have received from the India Office the following telegrams respecting his journey:—

"From General Prendergast, dated Bhamo, Dec. 29, 1885.

"I left Mandalay for Bhamo on 19th instant. Arrived at Bhamo on 28th instant, delay being due to intricacy of channel.

"Country along river bank quiet, and people generally express pleasure at our coming. The Bhamo Woon-duk sent a messenger to meet us at Sabatee, and came on board himself two miles below Bhamo. He has kept the town and neighbourhood quiet, and was glad to see us. The headman of the Chinese whom I met on shore was equally friendly. After reading my printed notices he remarked, 'The scene is the same; the actors only are changed.'

"The water is so shallow that steamers cannot approach nearer than two miles from Bhamo. Telegraph line in disrepair all the way up. Have arranged for its re-establishment from Mandalay to Tsengo, and will continue the line to Bhamo when operators and instruments have been received. Captain Adamson will be left as Political Officer."

VARIOUS opinions continue to be expressed as to the Viceroy's proposals for equalising Indian income and expenditure. On the whole, these are acquiesced in; but general regret is felt and expressed that the Government should no longer have the resource of the simple and easily-collected cotton import duties, and the want of foresight displayed by Lords Lytton and Ripon in abolishing those duties is condemned on all sides.

NOTWITHSTANDING the unfavourable weather, the manœuvres of the two opposing forces between Delhi and Umballa have been steadily proceeding for some time past. The cavalry of the northern force occupied Paniput on Friday, and a general action was expected to take place on that historic field yesterday. After the fighting, both forces will be drawn off towards Delhi, where they will meet about Wednesday, the southern force defending the city against the attack of the northern. The manœuvres proper will end about Friday next, when the preparations will begin for the field-days and reviews to be held in the presence of the Viceroy. Lord Dufferin will leave Calcutta about Saturday, and will stay two or three days at the camp. A novel feature, so far as Indian military manœuvres are concerned, is the presence of a Volunteer battalion composed of representatives from corps in various parts of the country, and commanded by Colonel Rivett Carnac, of the Ghazipore Volunteers.

THE enlistment of Gookhas is proceeding satisfactorily, at the rate of thirty to forty men daily.

THE Afghan Boundary Commission are about to go into winter quarters at Charshamba, whither letters had best be sent via Persia. They have practically settled the boundary as far as Maimenah, and hope to complete their work to the Oxus in the course of February.

COLONEL LOCKHART has returned from Chitral to Gilgit: his reception in Kafiristan, into which he did not, however, penetrate far, was friendly.

It appears from a return before us that the health of our Indian Army is improving. The death-rate for 1883-84 was only 10·88, against an average death-rate of 19·34 for the decimal period 1870-79. The total loss per thousand to the army from death and invaliding combined fell to forty-four, or less than the average for the same ten years by eighteen per thousand. Malarial fever, as usual, was the chief cause of sickness among the troops, and next to enteric fever, hepatitis and apoplexy were the principal causes of mortality.

AN Indian contemporary says that next year will probably witness the presence of a team of Australian riflemen in England to shoot for the Kholapur Cup at Wimbledon. We hope that the Indian team may also be there to encounter them. Indeed, the Englishman tells us that "a movement has already been set on foot to arrange for the attendance of an Indian team at the next meeting. The only difficulty is the financial one, and it is pointed out that this difficulty would be overcome were each volunteer to subscribe eight annas. When it is considered that many volunteers would willingly subscribe a great deal more than this nominal sum, all that would seem necessary to secure an adequate fund is that the movement should be brought prominently forward. At the same time it is hoped that the outside public who are interested in the movement will also lend a helping hand. It is proposed, we believe, that each regiment shall nominate one or more men, according to the amount of its subscriptions, and that a captain of the team shall be nominated by the committee, to make the final selections after practice in England."

THE advice as to the annexation of Burma, tendered by the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce, is, says the Civil and Military Gazette, good:—

That the Tinedah Minghee should have been allowed to remain in the capital, and that his services should be employed by the British authorities is an evident blunder; and must inevitably shake our confidence in Colonel Sladen's ability as a political officer. It is to be hoped that our military successes are not to be the prelude to political mismanagement.

THE Englishman tells us that, on the reopening of Upper Burma to trade, all duties, except those on the export of timber, earth-oil, rubies, and jade, have been removed. These customs duties are collected by British officers instead of by King Thebaw's Customs Contractor. The consequent saving to trade is from 15 to 20 per cent.

THE Native Press, though, as Lord Dufferin pertinently remarked, unacquainted with many of the considerations by which a responsible Government must be influenced, still cries out against the annexation of Burma. Here are some of its utterances:—

King Thebaw has surrendered, and will do whatever the English dictate to him. If the Government depose him or annex his territory, we shall understand that the war was undertaken not on account of his misbehaviour, but for other reasons. As he submitted, it would be fair to restore him to his kingdom. But the Government is so desirous to annex territory that it will not easily give up Burma.—The Bharat Mihir.

It would be better if Burma were not annexed. The people of Burma have neither done you harm nor insulted you. You were offended with Thebaw. He is now in your grasp, and you can treat him in any way you like. The people of Burma did not rise against you. Then why should you, who love independence so much, deprive them of it? You can save your prestige by placing some one of the Royal family of Burma on the throne.—The Bangabasi.

ENGLISH Conservatism seems to be on the way to be appreciated by Native journals. We inserted, but last week, some remarks on the subject: now the Sabachar follows suit:—

The Tories have done more good to India than the Liberals. One Tory Minister wrote the Queen's proclamation of 1853. It would be better if India were not governed by party politics. We ought to imitate the Irish, and not identify ourselves with any party in particular. If the whole population of India unite, they may attain the position of Australia and Canada.

YET the new Parliament is not looked at with favour. Thus speaks the Bheri and Khushdah:—

We think that India can expect very little from the new Parliament. Although it will contain a Liberal majority, men whom the people of India do not wish to see returned have secured seats, and the men to whom India might look for help are limited in number.

It is with much concern that we see the details, recorded by the Times Correspondent at Mandalay, in that journal's issue of the 6th, of the disorders which took place in that city on the occasion of its capture by the British forces. It is understood that it was his exposure, by telegraph, of these occurrences, which led to his being re-manded, by General Prendergast's order, to Rangoon; and the suspension from his office of a Correspondent, who, far from violating his duty by publishing what can be useful to the enemy, merely fulfils it by narrating facts unpalatable to a general in command, is wholly unjustifiable.

THE gilt is, too, "taken off the gingerbread" in another way. The Intelligence Department seem, though Burmans proffered information on all sides, to have been scandalously at fault; to such an extent, indeed, as to lead the General to order an attack on Ava, "along a line which, subsequent examination showed, passed for a considerable distance through a small lake some 10ft. deep."

It would be amusing, were it not lamentable, to read that the General was not even aware of the departure from Mandalay of the Kinwoon Mengyee, the senior Prime Minister, and a man who, unlike the Tynedah, would really have been of use in governing the country. We have got Burma, and must not "look a gift horse in the mouth." But, truly, all that glitters is not gold.

WE learn from Calcutta that the young Maha Rajah of Kashmir, a Chief believed to be thoroughly well disposed towards the British Government, has arrived there on a visit to the Viceroy. Such visits from Native Chiefs are far too infrequent; they are most desirable, and cannot be too warmly encouraged.

THE Native Press, to whom the Copyright Bill is a bête noire, will be glad to know that it will not be introduced in the Legislative Council during the present Session.

MR. COLMAN MACAULAY, Secretary of the Bengal Government, who lately went to Peking on a special mission on the subject of the opening of Tibet to trade, has returned to India. We are able, says the Times, to state that the Chinese Government have given a pass for the despatch of an English mission to Lhassa as the result of Mr. Macaulay's mission to Peking. Many such passes have been obtained, but always cancelled by private orders. Again we say, why no Ambassador at Peking?

WE are opportunely reminded of the ubiquity of Russia, and the irreconcilable nature of her interests, in every part of the Old World, with those of England, by the subjoined communication addressed to a contemporary from Vienna, and which we recommend to the consideration of those who still advocate the Euphrates Valley Route. It is, however, unlikely that our Government has forgotten the clause of the Treaty of Berlin referring to Armenia. "Reports from Constantinople speak," we are told, "of the Armenian question as likely soon to occupy the attention of Europe. The Porte is said to be suspiciously watching some attempts which are being made at Russian approximation to the Armenians. In the ukase confirming the new Catholicos mention is made, for the first time in any Russian official document, of a 'chère nation Arménienne'; and the Russian Consul at Van is suspected at Constantinople of organizing petitionary movements. A pamphlet, printed in Russia, glaringly illustrating all the abuses of Turkish rule in Armenia, and advocating a Russian occupation, has been seized at Tiflis."

A MEMBER of the Afghan Boundary Commission thus writes of Herat:—

The ride round the outside of the city to our quarters was a sight alone of itself sufficient to impress the new-comer with a sense of the strength of the place—the scarped ditch and the huge rampart, with its three lines of musketry fire, one above the other, not to mention the outworks and redoubts, made one naturally feel that one would be sorry to have to assault it, and express a hope that it may never be our fate to have to do so. We may legitimately hope to have a share in the defence, if the city is ever attacked, but never, I trust, will we allow it to fall into other hands, and so have to retake it.

It is the reverse of satisfactory to hear from another correspondent that the boundary, for which we were so nearly going to war, is, after all, by no means a good one, in other words, that two persons ignorant of the country, and assuredly not particularly astute, like Lords Granville and Kimberley, have been outwitted at every point by Lessar, who was astute, and perfectly knew the entire district in dispute. It must be a pleasant reflection for Lord Granville that, after we know not how many years' "diplomacy" (!) he has been twisted round the finger of a man who has never even been a Secretary of Legation! "The boundary," we read, "will be a bad boundary. There can be no two opinions about that. As proposed, it gives to Russia the power, should she ever choose to avail herself of it, of taking the Herat valley when she pleases, and of overrunning Afghan-Turkestan. But enough has been said about the strategical position from many sides, and a bad boundary is better than none."

WE have received from the India Office the following notification:—

BOMBAY MEDICAL RETIRING FUND.—Allotment of Annuities for 1886.—Surgeon-General D. Wyllie, M.D., £252; Brigade-Surgeon H. O. Thorold, £210; Surgeon-Major M. M. Mackenzie, £210*; Deputy Surgeon-General W. P. Partridge, £168*; Surgeon-Major E. R. Butler, £168*; Surgeon-Major W. Niven, £168*.

It has been finally settled that, some time in January next, the Viceroy will pay a visit to the Madras Presidency. His Excellency will visit Hyderabad, Mysore, and Travancore, and at the last place will preside at the installation of the young Maharajah.

FANCY the Native Press having the awful audacity to propose the abolition of the sacro-sanct India Office, the legitimate (by Act of Parliament) successor of that "Jan Oompanee Bahadoor," whose fiat was so irresistible! Yet we have "educated up" our Native brethren to this fearful point. As thus, to quote the Indian Mirror :—

The powers of organisation that the educated people of every part of India are now displaying ought to convince even our worst enemies how far we have really advanced, and how much we have profited from the political training we have been receiving. After such proofs as are being given, to say that the Natives of India are not fit to be entrusted with the larger powers of local self-government is simply idle. A programme of the business to be considered at the meeting of the Congress should be made out at once. Among the chief topics of discussion should, of course, be the abolition of the India Office, the remodelling of the Indian Civil Service, the separation of judicial from executive functions in the administration, the retrenchment of civil and military expenditure, the reconstitution of the Legislative Councils, the admission of Natives to the higher civil offices, the grant of commissions in the army to educated Natives, &c., &c. These are the most important questions pressing for immediate settlement.

THE novel process of churning butter by means of electricity, invented in America, is capable of converting 1,75,200 seers of milk into butter within 4½ minutes.

A TELEGRAM from Lahore states that a sharp engagement has been fought in the hills on the Buner border between the Guides and a party of the blockaded tribe of Bunerwals. The latter were driven from their position with heavy loss. Colonel Hutchinson, of the Guides, was severely wounded, and one sowar was killed and three wounded.

THE visit of the Maharajah of Cashmere to Calcutta has no political significance.

THE necessity for providing strong garrisons for the occupation of Upper Burma has raised the question of the expediency of largely increasing the Madras Army.

THE India Council, last Thursday, sold bills for Rs.10,000 on Calcutta and Rs.10,000 on Bombay at 1s. 5 31-32d. per rupee.

THE Bank of Bengal announce a dividend for the past half-year at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum, carrying forward Rs.1,55,000.

MESSRS. HENRY S. KING AND CO., the agents for the Bank of Madras, have just received the following telegram :—"Dividend declared for the past half-year at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum."

THE Bank of Bombay has declared an interim dividend of 5 per cent. for the past half-year, carrying forward 70,000 rupees.

The Subada Patrika says :—

There is one subject of a semi-social character which the delegates would do well not to overlook, and that is the mutual relations of the different sections of the population towards each other, especially Mahomedans and Hindus. The fanaticism of the lower orders of the former often breaks out in conflict with the latter and with the Parsis, and there is reason to fear that the jealousy of their higher classes, which is being engendered in connection with education and State employ, is likely to be utilised to foster mutual ill-feelings by some designing opponents of all Native interests. And this is not only an evil in itself, but will also tend seriously to thwart the success of any combined action in political matters. The subject, therefore, is no less important than any of those enumerated, and it is worth while to attend to it now on the principle of a stitch in time saves nine.

An encouraging fact! Anything which indicates the gradual breaking down of the (purely artificial) barrier between the English and Native ladies, and for the existence of which the former are so greatly responsible, is a cause of rejoicing. The Lucknow Express of the 8th inst. says :—

Over 2,000 parda nashin women visited the Exhibition yesterday. This rather astonished those in charge of the arrangements, whose most sanguine advisers had not been able to predict an attendance of more than 500. By the zealous management of the ladies of the Zenana Missions, assisted by some of the ladies of Cantonments and Civil Lines, the burden of looking after such a large gathering was very much lightened; and hence this experiment in exhibitions, so far, at least, as Upper India is concerned, was entirely successful.

Chit Chat.

THE disputed border on the outskirts of Afghanistan has been the scene of joyous convivialities. Here is the account according to the Pioneer :—"We had a grand dinner at the Russian Camp last night (14th November). It was in a reed hut, decorated out of all recognition. Bayonets formed excellent candlesticks, and the whole thing went off capitally; but we feel the effects a little this morning, as we commenced with port, went through Madeira, claret, and Caucasian wine, and finished up with champagne and jam! A Cossack guard outside sang beautifully the whole evening to the accompaniment of a small tom-tom. They were all in full dress—a perfect blaze of decorations, but some of the junior officers were of wild appearance, as though freshly come from the Caucasian jungles—only half-a-dozen out of the sixteen could speak anything but Russian."

SIMLA has gone in for penny readings, the great charm being that everyone meets, on these occasions, everyone else. So all are pleased. Then there is the rink, which is largely patronised, to say nothing of endless tea fêtes and private entertainments. So time passes pleasantly. On the night of the 27th November last there was a magnificent display of meteors, such as has never, perhaps, before been witnessed at that locality, the sky being described as filled with fire-flies.

INDIA is one of the very few countries which attempts to make a profit out of its criminals. But why not?—provided that Government do not undersell their goods in the market and thus handicap the regular trader.

BOMBAY is, it is said, likely to be worthily represented at the forthcoming Exhibition, but no one is to be deputed to explain the wares. This seems false economy, as a clever and experienced custodian could doubtless find customers who are less likely to be forthcoming if the goods are left to speak for themselves.

PETROLEUM has been discovered in the Bolan Pass sufficient not only to supply fuel for the Railways in that part of the world, but also for lighting the whole of Northern India. It would almost seem that this mineral oil is the illuminant and heat-producing substance of the future.

THE Duke of Wellington's receipt for Parliamentary success may aptly be quoted at the present time: "Say what you have to say; don't quote Latin, and sit down."

WHO can gauge the depths of the directorial mind as regards the Queen's English. It may safely be asserted that the following notice posted up in a railway-station stands unrivalled: "Hereafter when trains moving in an opposite direction are approaching each other on separate lines conductors and engineers will be required to bring their respective trains to a dead halt before the point of meeting, and be very careful not to proceed till each train has passed the other!"

"THEY tell me, Sir John," said his Majesty, the third of the Georges who sat on the throne of England, "that you are fond of glass of wine?" "Those, sir, who have so reported of me to your Majesty," replied the ready-witted courtier, "have done me a great injustice. They should have said a bottle."

AMONG the objects of interest in the forthcoming Indian Exhibition will be a model of the clipper yacht, Water Queen, which has never yet been distanced by any vessel on the Western coast. She carries a truly terrific spread of canvas, the amount of which may be gathered from the circumstance that though the boat herself is but 84 feet long she has a span which measures 96 feet. It would be interesting were she to try conclusions with one of the racers from Old England; but probably each kind of yacht is suited for its own waters, as currents and the nature of the wind, which may be either steady or puffy, fair or foul, contribute quite as much as "build" to the success or failure of any particular craft.

LAL MOHUN GHOSE was, as everybody knows, defeated at the last General Election. All the consolation that he gets from India is, that he should have joined the Parnellites; in that case he would have been sure of a seat!

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—Her Majesty the Queen has graciously expressed her willingness to become Patron of the forthcoming Colonial and Indian Exhibition.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

TIRESIAS, AND OTHER POEMS.*

A book of poems from the pen of the venerable Poet Laureate can never be otherwise than welcome, though in this instance the pieces are unpretentious, and scarcely calculated to add lustre to a name which has for years been a household word in this country; indeed, some of the fragments were written and given to the world more than a quarter of a century ago. Still there is much to admire in the present volume, of which the gem is undoubtedly "To-morrow," a tragic tale of Irish life, told in the dialect of the country. One quotation will suffice:—

"May all the flowers o' Jeroosilim blossom an' spring from the grass, Imbrashin' an' ki'sin' aich other—as ye did—over yer Crass!
An' the lark fly out o' the flowers wid his song to the sun an' the moon,
An' tell him in Hiven about Molly Magee and her Danny O'Roon, Till Holy St. Pether gits up wid his keys an' opens the gate!
An' shure, be the Crass, that's betther nor cuttin' the Sassanach whate
To be there wid the Blessed Mother an' Saints' an' Marthyrs galore,
An' singin' yer 'Aves' an' 'Pathers' for iver an' ivermore."

The place next in merit must be assigned to "The Spinster's Sweet-arts," though being written in the broad Northern dialect it is not always easy to follow, and some phrases have at times to be read again, which is of necessity wearisome, and apt to mar the pleasure of maiden verse. As before, one example of this fine poem must serve whereby to judge of the rest:—

"There! I ha' master'd them! Hed I married the Tommies—
O, Lord!

"Tiresias," which gives its name to the volume, is, to our mind, perhaps less attractive than the two poems to which we have alluded, though there are, of course, some fine passages in it. Of the minor fugitive pieces, the ode written on the marriage of H.R.H. the Princess Beatrice is by far the best. It has, however, so recently been before the public, that everyone will have formed his own judgment upon its merits.

With these few comments we bid farewell to a volume which is sure to find readers, and no less certain to meet with admirers.

A FAMILY AFFAIR.†

"Hugh Conway's" first two stories—it seems hard not to call them narratives, so realistic are they—were concerned so much with the supernatural, that one feels somewhat surprised to meet him in a field so entirely different as that presented by the story now before us. His success in both shows the rare versatility of his talent, and gives us the more reason to regret that a man so highly gifted should have been so early snatched from us while pursuing a career in which his individuality was so conspicuous.

We hold it to be the most cruel of (well meant) literary kindnesses to give, by way of reviewing a novel, its entire plot, to quote its most salient passages—in short, to deprive the lovely reader, to whom the last chapter is invariably the first, of her special pleasure. We desire only to say that there is a murder, by the wicked connivance of a railway locomotive, that there is—readers must go in for it—a long and chequered love affair—the course of true love will occasionally run off the rails—and that everything goes—we will not say whether right or wrong—at the last.

No book of Hugh Conway could fail to abound in most thrilling scenes. And we do not think that we shall violate our own maxim if, "just for the sake of curiosity," as the children say, we whet our readers' appetites by calling their especial attention to the scene in the railway carriage between the faithful, yet half-consciously maniacal, servant, Miller, and the villain of the piece, Hervey, whom Miller thinks she has a mission to kill, yet does not know how to set about it. This is admirably conceived, and well worked out.

We are glad to have seen "Hugh Conway's" abilities so well displayed in a larger field than that to which he had previously confined himself, and can promise a real treat to anyone who peruses this his last work.

KING SOLOMON'S MINES.*

King Solomon is, throughout the East, the great monarch half king, half magician, to whose instrumentality everything is ascribed. If there be a singularly-shaped mountain, it is "Suliman's" throne; serrated mountain ranges are equally Suliman's. In the Arabian Nights how many marvels are not placed to his credit? Now, that "Suliman" had diamonds of great splendour we know; that they excelled other diamonds is sufficiently evident from the fact that they were "Suliman's." The wise king must have got them from some part of the world. Brazil may be put out of the question; Golconda, or other parts of India (or Further India) used to be the supposed locale of the great diamond mines, until the discovery of numerous diamonds in unlimited quantity, and, occasionally, of really good quality, in South Africa led some people to the idea that it might have been from this quarter that the wisest of men drew his supplies. Acting on this notion, and on the well-known fact that the intercourse of the Jews with Central, if not with Southern, Africa, was, both by land and sea, very frequent, Mr. Haggard has given us a most entertaining account of the adventures of a party who, joining a wealthy Baronet in his quest after a younger and long-lost brother, penetrate Africa as far as to the North of Zululand, engage as their servant a man who turns out to be the legitimate king of the tribe whom they visit, defeat and kill in single combat the reigning monarch, penetrate to "Solomon's mines," and, after being nearly entombed therein through the treachery of an old witch who guides them, and who closes the secret door of the treasure house while they are occupied in ransacking it, escape with pockets (of the narrator of the veracious story, Mr. Allan Quartermain) full of huge diamonds, a small part of the third share of which—for they divided the spoil equally—was valued at £180,000.

Who is, or is not, married, we have no intention to disclose. Readers must find out for themselves, and will be well repaid. The story, given throughout as a narrative of individual adventure, is told with great realistic power; and the many legends and traditions relating to the mysterious regions of South Central Africa—some well-known—are skillfully interwoven in the tale, while the interest is well sustained throughout. Above all, the book, while sufficiently entertaining for any reasonably exacting reader, is one which can safely be placed in the hands of the young.

We can give Mr. Haggard's tale no higher praise than we do in saying that we have never read a story which so strongly recalls to mind that admirably written book, "Le Compere Mathieu," which, however, differs from the present volume in trenching on questionable topics.

HOME WHIST.†

"Home Whist," as opposed to "club whist," is a title which can hardly fail to attract Anglo-Indian readers, to whom club whist, except on chance visits to the Presidency, the larger stations, or to the "old country," is all but unknown. How rarely in outlying Mofussil stations has it been possible to get up a rubber without the intervention of that—(word not used before ladies) dummy? The occasions have been almost as rare as the angels—we beg pardon, the Padre's—visits, very few and very far between.

Odd it is that mathematicians—va sans dire as to mathematicians and astronomers that, "soothly for to say, they are at one"—are, as a rule, unusually good whist-players. And Mr. R. A. Proctor, well known by his previous work on whist, is no exception, which we can safely say without pretending to place him on the same level as the late Admiral Rous. That he is thoroughly competent to act as a guide to the mysteries of a game through which any novice may stumble, but which not one man in ten thousand plays really well, scarce needs saying; and that his instruction is administered "as pleasantly as such a thing may be" (to quote the words used about the rack in the Tower), may truly be averred. But it is well to remember that books about whist must be perused, as the game itself must be played, "with brains." Thus used, this work will be found invaluable. The sun has, teste Mr. Proctor, spots; and, similarly, no book is sans blemish. We must say—and we do so without the least desire of finding faults in a book which we much like—that we do not agree with Mr. Proctor's plan of dealing with revokes by deducting, at the end of the game, three points from the revoker's score, plus one from that of his partner. We prefer to stand on the old ways.

* "King Solomon's Mines." By H. Rider Haggard. Cassell and Co. 1885.

† "Home Whist: An Easy Guide to Correct Play, according to the Latest Developments." By Five of Clubs (Richard A. Proctor) London: Longmans and Co. 1886.

There are some unwritten laws in whist which cannot be too often impressed, not on tyros only, but on people who know what a rubber is, and who would scorn to play "Whitechapel" or "Butcher-boy." These relate to silence and even temper. If chance should give a talkative adversary, let him chatter; ten to one that he "roughs" his partner's best card, or commits some other act of stupendous folly: if a garrulous partner, "shut him up," at the risk even of having "pistols for two and coffee for one" afterwards. And, above all, mark, oh! reader, for thyself, that, when thou sittest down to the whist-table, thou performest a solemn act: thou art doing puya to the Goddess of Silence.

WE take the subjoined from Messrs. W. J. and H. Thomson's annual report on the tea trade:—

INDIAN TEAS.—Low prices early in the year induced large consumption, which led to recovery in value. There was active demand for the new crop at prices above 1884, but the increased quantity of fine afterwards reduced the superior grades to a low level, while all common qualities were fully maintained.

Ceylon teas have doubled in quantity and kept up their quality. Demand has become general, and the average price ranges steadily at 1s. 3d. to 1s. 4d. per lb.

It will be noticed that nearly the whole increase in home consumption is in Indian and Ceylon tea.

Prospects.—The stock being considerably reduced, and the quantity to arrive from all quarters only moderate, we look forward to a steady market, but at the same time a sensitive one, in the event of increased inquiry or speculative feeling. The strong position of Congou is likely to be maintained for some months.

THE RUPEE.

"How art thou fallen from that Two-and three
Which filled my heart with glee
So far, Rupee?"

THUS said, or rather sang—it is the correct thing now-days to say that people "sing" whenever they make a rhyme—a correspondent of one of our Indian contemporaries. And it may be well to consider what this "fall" really means. Any month might possibly bring about some inconsiderable difference in the rates of exchange between India and Europe; but the steady decrease in the value of silver which has taken place is fraught with the gravest consequences. Though not belonging to the Statistical Society, and not being addicted to Tabular Statements, we cannot help thinking the subjoined well worthy of consideration. It shows the value of the rupee, as indicated by the prices realised by the India Office for their weekly drafts on India, for the past eleven years:—

COUNCIL DRAFTS.—1873-74, 22½d.; 1874-75, 22½d.; 1875-76, 21½d.; 1876-77, 20½d.; 1877-78, 20½d.; 1878-79, 19½d.; 1879-80, 19½d.; 1880-81, 19½d.; 1881-82, 19½d.; 1882-83, 19½d.; 1883-84, 19½d.; 1884-85, 19d.

The consequences of this depreciation have been most disastrous, and the sinking to less than 18d.—drafts have lately been sold at a fraction under that amount—of the rupee value will be a bad New Year's gift to many a civilian and to many a military officer. To find one's income reduced by a full quarter of its value, to receive about £74 where one had a right to expect £100, will, to many a man who, early in his service, has "got into the banks," and has to support a family in England, be almost equivalent to downright insolvency.

Nor is it the individual alone who is affected. It is no longer a secret that some at least of the Funds, on which retired Government servants and their families depend for their support, and to which they have largely contributed, are, if not absolutely bankrupt, assuredly not in a satisfactory condition.

It might be said, increase the salaries to meet this urgent difficulty: restore them to what they would have represented in a normal condition of the money market; to that amount, in fact, which, when they were assigned to each post, was considered commensurate with its dignity and its unavoidable expenses. But (not to say that the Native Press is already very outspoken on the subject of the salaries paid to Europeans) this measure, however pleasing it might be to the holders of posts under Government, is, unfortunately, simply impossible. For the Government is in the same position as its servants.

Much outcry has been raised, both in India and in England, against the proposed addition of two millions sterling to the annual military outlay of India. It has been denounced as a specimen of reckless Conservative extravagance, Jingoism, and what not. It has seemingly escaped the notice of the fault-finders that this extra charge, so far as it affects the taxation, is, as nearly as possible, exactly equivalent to the depreciation of silver values. The India Council has thus far realised, speaking roughly, £5,189,000 for Rs. 8,05,24,400 of drafts during the current financial year. That is to say, there was a deficit, on these drafts alone, approximating to the amount of the extra military charge; and that, in these circumstances, only £700,000 should have had to be raised by extra imposts is, in our opinion, highly creditable to Lord Dufferin's administration of affairs.

Yet the position is by no means an easy one. Nor is it improving. There is no present indication of any, the slightest, amelioration in the prevailing rates. As an Indian contemporary observes:—

In spite of the efforts of America, which has continued coining at the rate of five millions a year, until she has hardly room to store the useless bullion, the position of the metal has grown steadily worse. The present great fall has taken place in face of the prospects of an increased demand from China, of large supplies to be required by France for remittance to Tonquin, and in face of a considerable diminution of the Secretary of State's sale of bills on India. The increasing use of this form of remittance was specified by the Silver Committee as one of the principal causes of a decline in India's demand. As then, the Home authorities are making less use of bills, it should follow that there has been more use for bullion. If under this combination the price of silver is found to fall, under what conceivable circumstances can it reasonably be expected to rise?

As the Pioneer remarks:—

The Government of India is now in the position of a man who has invested his whole income in a depreciated stock. All its revenues it receives in a metal which has fallen by some 25 per cent; and it has to meet a huge annual debt in another metal which has risen in value.

The Times, some weeks back, pointed to the probable absorption of silver for railway construction in China as a possible remedy; for, as was rightly enough observed:—

A population of four hundred millions, needing a railroad equipment, and with it a trade expansion, could absorb twelve shillings per head with ease; and an absorption of even two shillings per head would result in the actual appreciation of silver in terms of gold.

Yet this is a contingency which, though it may in some degree be accelerated by our advent in Upper Burma, must, for all practical purposes, be relegated to the distant future. The difficulty with which we have to deal has certainly not been diminished by the lapse of time. Nevertheless it is to altered commercial relations, which time (possibly, rather than probably, aided by legislation, however judicious) can alone bring about, that we must, in part at least, look for its removal. Yet it is a matter which surely deserves investigation by someone free from "fads." Is there no expert whose intellect is unobscured by prepossessions in favour of bimetalism, monometallism, or any other ism of the kind, and who can show us our way out of the impasse?

We are glad to be able to supplement our list of Emper-

Day honours by the announcement that the Financial Secretary at the India Office, Mr. Henry Waterfield, has been awarded the honour of a C.B. ship, in this following in the steps of his distinguished predecessor in office, Sir Thomas Secombe, who obtained the C.B. some years before being appointed K.C.S.I. We hope that Mr. Waterfield may, at some future time, follow Sir Thomas's lead.

C.B. SHIPS are gazetted by the War Office, and it is not a little characteristic of that Department, which is always "a day after the fair," that whereas both the India and Colonial Offices managed to gazette their honours on Jan. 1, the War Office should not announce theirs till the ensuing week!

WAR OFFICE, DEC. 31.

The Queen has been pleased to give orders for the following appointment to the Most Honourable Order of the Bath:—

To be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the said Most Honourable Order, viz.:—Henry Waterfield, Esq, Financial Secretary, India Office.

SCINDIA AND THE EMPIRE.

We take from an article in the Lahore Civil and Military Gazette the following extracts:—

"In the rendition of the Gwalior Fort we see at last the opening of a new era. The restoration to one of our greatest Nobles of the much-prized stronghold of his ancestors removes one of the last of the landmarks of the deplorable history of 1857. It would be almost an insult to a State, which is one of the great bulwarks of the Indian Empire, to explain that there are no reasons, military or political, for retaining a fortress which Scindiah lost through no fault of his own in 1858, and which was recovered for him by the great soldier recently deceased. Our argument must take a wider scope, and must show why there are no reasons, military or political, for withholding from him, and from the other great Nobles of India, the position they so earnestly desire of leaders, instead of mere spectators, in the defence of their country.

"If there were any such reasons, they surely held good under the Mogul rule, as much, if not more than, under ours. The Moguls were no less foreigners than ourselves, and theirs was really an empire of invasion and conquest; while ours, in the same sense, certainly is not. And yet, under the Moguls, what do we see? Aurungzeb held the Passes of the Hindu Kush for sixteen years with an army of Rajputs, headed by their Chief. Akbar's greatest generals and most devoted adherents were the descendants of the men whom his grandfather had conquered. Where are the Indian Chiefs now in the British scheme of defence? What strength is now drawn by the Empress of India from the Nobles whose possessions cover one-third of her Indian dominions, whose subjects form one-fifth of the population, and whose revenues equal one-fourth of that of the British Government? They maintain forces of various kinds, aggregating some 300,000 men; they are willing and anxious to use their power for the common defence; there are no difficulties worth the name in the way of rendering that power available; and yet, in the event of a war with Russia next year, of what real utility could these Chiefs possibly be, with all their resources and all their good-will, in a struggle so vast and involving such tremendous issues?

"When will the traditions of 1857 disappear? When shall we adopt, heartily and completely, the policy of trust instead of that of suspicion? Can any sane person really doubt of the solidarity of interest between the Indian and English subjects of the Queen? If so, let him go forth into the highways and byways; let him talk with Races and Ryot, with merchant and artisan and agriculturist; even (pace the Native Press) with Babu and B.A. We do not speak to the official only, but to the independent European, be he travelling M.P., or Globe-trotter, or Anglo-Indian. Let him feel the pulse of the country, and he will find it beat true with his own. It is Hamari Sirkar against the world, and this common bond of loyalty embraces all classes. What matters it if the Native Press indulges in seditious clap-trap? Would a rational foreigner take his impression of the feelings of the English population from seditious publications in London, addressed to a small minority which likes its dish of politics served up spicy and hot, and is little particular as to the substance of the ragout?"

INDIA is brimful of excitement. Archer, the renowned jockey, is about to visit the City of Palaces with the view of riding "Statesman," the favourite for the Viceroy's Cup at Calcutta. Betting is rampant, and come what may some persons will regret the day which lands the celebrated rider on the shores of our possessions in the East.

PROFESSOR DOUGLAS writes to the Times a letter, from which we extract the following passages. We have already expressed our opinion that, while it will assuredly be wise to concede much to China, we ought to think once, twice, and thrice, before giving up a position so strategically important as Bhamo:—

It cannot be denied (says the Professor) that the position of Burma as a tributary has rested exactly on the same foundation as the like positions occupied by Corea, Annam, Tibet, and Nepal. All these States send periodical missions to Peking, carrying tribute, exactly as Burma has been in the habit of doing, and they all receive presents in return. The suzerainty of China over them has never been questioned either by themselves or anyone else, and her interference on their behalf when attacked or disturbed by foreign Powers has been invariably recognised as the legitimate action of a paramount State. Who for a moment questioned her right to interfere in Tonquin, or to take part in the Korean imbroglio?

This being granted, it seems to me impossible to deny that China had suzerain rights over Burma. They may have been ill-defined and difficult of more than constructive proof. But there cannot be a question that they did exist, and that the Kings of Burma freely acknowledged them both in word and deed. But do they exist any longer? When we took possession of the provinces of Lower Burma in 1826 and 1852 China did not, if I recollect right, raise any question of suzerainty over the captured provinces. She took cognizance of the King only, and never pretended to hold any rights in the soil. We have now taken the rest of the kingdom by force and deposed China's tributary. Did we not by that act also annul China's suzerainty? If China wishes to preserve her suzerainty, would not it be her duty to insist on our either restoring Thebaw or accepting the arbitrament of arms?

But I imagine that there is no desire to quarrel with China; in fact, it would be obviously against our interests to do so, for without her co-operation our new province would lose three-fourths of its value to us. We are, however, in possession, and the Chinese know well enough that if their armies were unable to defeat the Burmese they would have little chance against our troops. But as a friendly understanding with them is desired, surely some plan might be devised which should satisfy China's pretensions, and at the same time free us for ever from the remotest suspicion of being in any sense subject to her. A slice of territory would serve, and even if the slice included Bhamo, which has always been more Chinese than Burmese, it would be well bestowed in exchange for the good-will of China, by means of which we can alone hope to gain ready access to the boundless markets of Western China.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by day-light, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGH, COLD, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This fact is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. EAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From Chemists, Simla, Jan. 6, 1885.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their enjoyment there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist or prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNBROKEN LOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURERS, J. T. DAVENPORT, 38, St. Russell St., W.G.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire; comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 1st Jan.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 30th Dec.

THE weekly telegram of the Times' Calcutta correspondent is chiefly devoted to the manoeuvres, of which we elsewhere give an account. On their conclusion the Viceroy will visit Delhi, and, doubtless, personally receive the foreign officers deputed to witness the evolutions.

THE last news about the Afghan Frontier Commission is dated the 9th, and is that the mission is encamped at Charshambeh for the winter. Captains Maitland and Talbot were well received by the Sirdar Ishak Khan, Governor of Turkestan. The winter weather is comparatively mild, and the work of surveying between the Murghab and the Oxus is being pushed on. Kara Turcoman raids from Bokhara are becoming increasingly frequent in the Maimeneh district. The health of all the members of the mission is excellent.

THE Rangoon Gazette has throughout been "fanatic per" the annexation of Burma. We have not always seen our way to advocate the measure, and have, with the late Sir A. Phayre, been reluctantly brought to admit its necessity. Yet we cannot but recognise the truth of the subjoined remarks of our Rangoon contemporary. It is, we think, clearly proved that we did not interfere too soon:—

Even to their own people the Burmese Kings were cruel and relentless, pouring out blood like water whenever interest or caprice demanded it; but to those of a different race they would have adopted the policy of extermination had they been able to do so. Under Native rule Burma was lapsing back to jungle, and the population was being reduced to a handful of warring tribes, living from hand to mouth, because there was no use attempting to do anything else when permanent improvements simply invited destruction. Under English rule, a portion of the country has already made enormous strides in population, civilisation and productiveness; and once the blighting influences of Native rule are entirely abolished, the land will speedily become, as Nature meant it to be, the garden and granary of the East.

We are glad at length to see some of the Native papers applauding the annexation. The Bengalee remarks:—

Thebaw has capitulated with his kingdom, his palaces, and his person. History does not record a more ignominious surrender than his. He put on the air of an independent prince, and used language in his communications which befitted that position. But he had not the heart of an independent Prince, nor did he know how to use the resources which, as an independent Prince, he possessed. In his fall he will not receive the sympathy of civilised countries. The ignominy of that fall will cover his name with merited reproach, and intercept the flow of sympathy for him and his people.

While the Hindoo Patriot has the following:—

Mandalay has fallen; King Thebaw has surrendered; the entire kingdom of the Lord of the Golden Umbrella is now an appanage of our Gracious Sovereign. It is a time for general felicitation, and in all loyalty and devotion we congratulate our Queen-Empress on this rich and extensive accession to her dominion, on which the sun never sets. From the day when the Viceregal proclamation was published we were fully prepared for this issue. We knew it would be, in sporting parlance, a simple walk-over, and so it has proved to be.

And, after describing Thebaw's capture, perorates thus:—

Thus ended the sovereignty of the line of Alompara, and Upper Burma passed to the British. This is not the occasion to discuss the policy or the principle of the measures which have brought on this conclusion. But this is certain, that King Thebaw has retired from a throne which he disgraced by manifold cruelties, and his retirement will be followed by progress, prosperity, and enlightenment for the millions who bore his sway.

THE Broad Arrow thus writes:—

The greatly increased importance of British Burma will, there can be no doubt, lead to the appointment of a Lieutenant-Governor in place of the Chief Commissioner who has hitherto ruled over the affairs of the province beyond the seas. It is not at present known who will receive the new appointment, although Mr. C. E. Bernard, C.S.I., an old and tried member of the Bengal Civil Service, who has been Commissioner of Burma since the appointment of Sir Charles Aitchison to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the Punjab, is, of course, named for the office. As the Indian lieutenant-governorships carry pay at the rate of £8,333 a-year, the Civil Servant in charge of Burmese affairs may reckon on an increase of £4,000 a-year over his predecessors in the appointment.

THE Civil and Military Gazette thus remarks on General Hughes's appointment to succeed General Wilson as military member of the Viceroy's Council. We do not doubt the General's competency; but, where we have a choice, we prefer, in all cases, as most of the Anglo-Indian papers seem in this case to do, the man most fitted for the post. That this man is General Chesney no one has yet expressed a doubt:—

The appointment (says our contemporary) of Major-General T. E. Hughes, R.A., to succeed General Wilson as military member of Council will scarcely pass without some suspicion of favouritism to that branch of the Service to which Sir Frederick Roberts and General Hughes, now Director General of Ordnance in India, both belong. The gunners are having rather a large share of the military preferment going; and there are certain to be some heartburnings. Those, however, who know General Hughes also know that, besides having great interest, he is a thoroughly practical man, with a wide and varied experience, and plenty of tact. His sterling honesty and shrewd common sense would alone serve to mark him out as a fitting adviser for the Government of India at this critical time.

WRITING on the subject of the recent elections, the Ananda Bazaar Patrika says:—

The Liberals and Conservatives are alike to us. So long as we cannot help ourselves our miseries will not cease. If the Liberals were our real friends, then Mr. Digby, Sir John Phear, Mr. Smith, and Babu Lal Mohun Ghose, would not have been defeated in the elections. So long as we crave for mercy from the Liberals and Conservatives without making ourselves strong, none of them will be our real friends.

FROM Peking it is telegraphed to the Times that:—

It is stated here that Herr von Brandt has formally notified to the Tsung-li-Yamen that the German Government will refuse to give its consent to the regulations framed by China to carry out the Opium Convention with Great Britain unless the Chinese are prepared to give a quid pro quo.

GOVERNMENT BY CONTRACT AND CONTRACTORS!—It is understood that in consequence of the defective condition of so many of the bayonets and swords in possession of the cavalry and infantry at Aldershot, it has been determined that the whole of the bayonets and swords at home shall undergo an examination similar to that which during the past week has been in progress at Aldershot, and which has already been ordered for the southern district, whose headquarters are at Portsmouth. It is considered likely that the examination will be extended to the troops of all branches of Her Majesty's forces at home and abroad, and will probably include those bayonets which are not of the new Line pattern, about which doubts have been the more especially expressed. The bayonets of the home Volunteers are of an older and shorter pattern than those carried by the Regulars. May we hope that the swords and bayonets of our troops in India may be tested before their bearers are called on to try conclusions with the Russians?

THE Native Press seems to apprehend the probable revival of the Press—or, as it used to be called, the Press-gagging—Act. Thus speaks the Sanjibani:—

It is rumoured that the Press Act will be revived. The Government is being now severely criticised for its proceedings with regard to Burma. If the Conservatives remain in power, the Native papers will be muzzled. Oppressive people are against the newspapers, and dislike their utterances. Lord Lytton was oppressive, so he gagged the Press for fear of being exposed. Lord Dufferin is a Liberal, but his actions in the Burmese war, in the Bhopal affair, and with regard to the Native Volunteer movement, have created some misgivings. Lord Lytton was a diplomat, and so is Lord Dufferin. Whether the Press Act is revived or not, we shall speak the plain truth, and in so doing we shall even be prepared to die.

IN India, says the Indian Agricultural Gazette, there are ninety cotton mills, large and small, involving a capital of seven and a quarter crores of rupees, consuming annually 235 millions of lbs. of cotton, and giving employment to 70,000 operatives. Of these there are forty-nine in the island of Bombay itself, twenty-four in the Presidency of Bombay, nine in Bengal and the N.W. Provinces, and eight in Madras and in the Presidency of Madras.

ALL savants will grieve over the loss recorded by the Bombay Gazette in the subjoined paragraph, and will wish that the worthy commander of the Indus had been "further off" (shore) "first":—

General Alexander Cunningham has been one of the most unfortunate passengers in the P. and O. Co.'s s.s. Indus, which was wrecked on the Madras coast. He had sent home by her the whole of his personal property, consisting of no less than forty-three boxes. These contained not only all his library, but also the notes which he had made during his many journeys and long residence in India; as well as a series of papers, many of which were complete and almost ready for publication. "The loss to the learned world," writes the Lahore paper, "is grievous in the extreme. The notes and papers can never be replaced, and the works which the General intended bringing out at home must be, to say the least, postponed. We believe his cabinet of coins was not in the Indus. Had this been lost, many unique coins of the Græco-Bactrians and Indo-Scythians would have disappeared for ever."

At a meeting of the Council of the London Chamber of Commerce, held on the 14th inst., at the offices in King William-street, under the presidency of Mr. J. H. Tritton (Barclay, Bevan, and Co., bankers), it was resolved that the best thanks be accorded Her Majesty's Government for its prompt and decisive action in proclaiming the annexation of Burma, thereby relieving British trade with Indo-China from the uncertainty and irregularity caused by the mischievous rule of King Thebaw. Another resolution was also passed requesting the Government to recognise the services rendered to the trade of the kingdom by the explorations of Mr. A. R. Colquhoun and Mr. Holt S. Hallett in connection with the railway from Burma to the south-western frontier of China. It was announced by the secretary, Mr. Kenrick Murray, that, by permission of the Lord Mayor, the annual meeting of the Chamber would be held at the Mansion House on February 11, and delegates were subsequently nominated to attend the forthcoming meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom to be held in London in the same month. The question of the advisability of establishing commercial museums was subsequently discussed, and arrangements made for the appointment of officers for the current year.

WE heard some time since that the new Ameer of Bokhara, on proceeding in state to the great mosque, was enthusiastically received by the people. It was also reported that the elder brothers of the Ameer have sent special messengers to assure his Highness of their devotion. "We believe, however," says the Civil and Military Gazette, "that the late Ameer's eldest son, now living in British territory, has as yet received no authentic information from Bokhara of his father's death."

COMPLAINTS still pour in from Ceylon as to the entire absence of fortifications at Colombo. As a correspondent of the Ceylon Times very justly remarks:—

Suppose war was to break out, and that a man-of-war we all are to rely on is not on the spot. One evening, knowing the large stock of coal in Colombo, and that Banks and Government usually have some coin in their vaults, the enemy would at once make a dash for Colombo, get a couple of ships inside the harbour, and make Colombo their coaling station, and help themselves freely to rupees should they require them. What next? Why, it would require several of our men-of-war to retake Colombo, and, in doing so, they would probably destroy the town, and so, instead of preventing the chance of Colombo falling into the hands of an enemy by the erection of suitable fortifications, we run the risk of being bombarded by our own war vessels.

THE exports of Indian Tea from Calcutta to England are, says the Englishman, steadily increasing. The exports in November amounted to 11,644,612 lbs., the returns for the corresponding months of the two preceding years being respectively 9,340,037 lbs. and 7,140,887 lbs. The total exports from the 1st of May to the end of November were 47,130,072 lbs. The trade with Australia shows an even more remarkable development. Up to the end of November the shipments amounted to 1,334,784 lbs.; the amount in 1884 being only 577,518 lbs., and that in 1883, 206,436 lbs. There is also an improvement in the trade with America, although the exports to that country (70,946 lbs.) are considerably less than in 1883. Altogether there is an improvement in the trade up to date, as compared with last year, of nearly five million pounds. The Ceylon trade is also advancing with rapid strides, the figures for the past three years (from 1st October to 19th November) being 101,286 lbs., 193,869 lbs., and 471,402 lbs. The exports from India to England include 534,217 lbs. that were lost in the steamers Indus and City of Manchester. It must be admitted that these figures are highly favourable, especially for a time of severe and widespread depression. They augur well for the further increase which may be expected with the return of general prosperity.

CINCHONA cultivation is gradually assuming a more important place in the resources of India. According to the latest returns, the cultivated area in the Government plantations in Sikkim was 2,296 acres, containing nearly four and three-quarter millions of trees producing bark. In addition to the above, the nurseries contained nearly half a-million seedlings and rooted cuttings. The quantity of bark collected was only 306,160 lbs., being much less than the average of the four previous years, but with the stock in hand at the beginning of the year, 469,968 lbs. of bark were available for use. Of this amount 320,320 lbs. were given to the Quinologist for manufacture, the production amounting to 8,464 lbs. of Government febrifuge at a cost of Rs. 10-4-7 per pound, and 250 pounds of the superior crystalline febrifuge at a cost of Rs. 15-6-11 per pound. The majority of the trees in these plantations consist of Cinchona Succirubra, but these are being gradually replaced by C. Calusaga Legeriana, of which 854,218 trees have been permanently planted out. The Government plantations in the Nilgiris cover 847 acres planted out, the number of trees on which is 1,315,454. The bark collected during the year amounted to 183,765 lbs., of which 30,510 lbs. were sent for sale to England, 62,616 lbs. sold by auction at Madras, 1,000 lbs. issued to the Bombay Medical Department, and the remainder kept in stock. The only other Government plantation is at Thandoungyee in British Burma, but this at present contains only 90,000 plants, none of which have at present arrived at an age for bearing. Accurate information has not yet been procured with regard to the extent and number of plants on the private cinchona plantations, but, so far as is known, in Bengal there were 680 acres, bearing 1,116,778 plants, which, however, only yielded 4,300 lbs. of bark, as most of the plants are yet quite young. In Maisur there were 23 acres of plantations, containing 22,949 plants, and their yield during 1884 was 3,472 lbs. The cultivation is carried on in Kurg on a more extended scale, for in that district there are 1,868 acres with 1,494,385 plants growing upon them, but no return of the production of bark has been obtained.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—We learn from the Statist that the price obtained by the India Council for Government Bills at the allotment on Wednesday, though a poor one, being, in fact, the lowest ever recorded, was not unsatisfactory compared with the extreme depression of the previous week, when, it will be remembered, the applications sent in were so low that the Council refused to make any allotment at all. On Wednesday the whole of the 35 lakhs offered were placed, one lakh being taken at 1s. 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ d., and the remaining 34 lakhs at 1s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. On Friday five more lakhs were taken at the same price, as well as a lakh of transfers at 1s. 6d. per rupee. The amounts disposed of and the rates obtained at this week's official allotment of India Council remittances were as follows:—

	Council Bills.
	Rs.	Average.	Minimum.
Calcutta	24,77,000	1s. 5 876d.	1s. 5 3d.	66 per cent.
Bombay	Nil.
Madras	10,23,000	1s. 5 875d.	1s. 5 3d.	66 per cent.

This week 35 lakhs of Council bills will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to January 12th inclusive, the Council has granted remittances for Rs. 8,06,05,613, realising £6,195,507. To the corresponding date last year Rs. 11,29,30,318, realising £9,175,525, had been disposed of.

Chit Chat.

THE Punjab Frontier Force Infantry is a magnificent body of men, yet withal a fashionable lady in Calcutta, with more beauty than wit, calmly asked one of these drab-clad warriors why he was dressed in "buggy-lining?" When the fair sex do forget themselves they do it with a vengeance.

It is said of the Hon. Arthur Cole that he arrived in Mysore as Resident with an Irish servant and a portmanteau, and returned after a stay of twenty years with the same "wares" and nothing else; but nowadays men are for themselves rather than for their country.

DR. BLUMFIELD, Bishop of London, when a widower with a large family, married a widow also blessed with numerous offspring; in due course a third stock was added to the huge total. One Christmas Day the worthy dignitary of the Church asked a clergyman to a friendly dinner, telling him "you will only meet our family party." Imagine the man's astonishment when he found the room filled with people, and his bewilderment when the Bishop explained, "these are mine, those are hers, and all the others are ours!"

THE shareholders of the Bombay and Burma Trading Company are very angry because they received less dividend than usual, thanks to the prudence of the directors in setting aside a larger reserve than customary to meet possible contingencies, consequent on events in Burma. This is strange; it might have been supposed that the investors would have been only too thankful to get any return at all for their capital, and undoubtedly this would have been the case had a less energetic Viceroy than the present nobleman sat on the throne at Calcutta.

THE contagion of "distinctions without a difference" is catching. M. Ferry some time ago told the French Chambers that the bombardment of Foochow was not war, but only a "state of reprisals." The Alexandrian explanation had borne fruit across channel; this time it is the events in Afghanistan which have afforded the French an opportunity of imitation. Just as poor Lumden was kept kicking his heels about for months till the Russians thought fit to cure their delegate on the Boundary Commission, who had unaccountably fallen ill just when, from an English point of view, he ought to have been well, so now the unfortunate Chinese Commissioners are kicking their heels in Tonquin, till it suits the convenience or inclination of the Republic to send some one to treat with them. "One fool makes many," says the homely proverb; but perhaps the fools in the above cases were not they who kept others waiting, but rather they who chafed and fumed as they danced to the piping of more astute if less unscrupulous diplomatists.

THE Pioneer is very angry, and rightly so—that the local press are urging that the recent frauds by which candidates in the Bombay University Examinations were provided beforehand with copies of the papers to be set them should be hushed up, "out of consideration for the feelings of all concerned." This is truly delicious. "Whose feelings," inquires the Pioneer, are thus tenderly to be respected? It would be difficult to answer the question, but the whole matter affords a fair sample of how things are managed in the Native Press. To hush up an affair "out of consideration to the feelings of all concerned," is not infrequently at once prudent and desirable, when, that is, nothing but loathsome details, or heartrending disclosures, would be likely to result. At once the enthusiastic Native editor assumes that this is the "correct thing" to do, and the suggested "hushing up" is reserved for a fitting occasion. It reminds one strongly of the amiable lady when, on hearing the witty observation of a guest who characterised the carelessness of a servant in dropping a longue, as a "lapsus linguæ," she ordered her servant to let fall a joint of beef, and then made the same joke!

How small matters will upset an editor's equilibrium. The Pioneer of the 23rd December has a case in point. Two paragraphs appear relating to the team of Indian Volunteers which will, it is hoped, compete next year at Wimbledon: it was intended that they should appear in a certain sequence, the second being headed with a reference to the first; but alas for the variety of an editor's wishes, the printer alive to the fact that at times "the last shall be first and the first shall be last," changed the places of the paragraphs, with a result that the astonished reader commences his perusal with a sentence explaining that "since writing the above" something has happened, but there was no "above."

WHAT is gratitude, and where is it to be found? Where, indeed! Not, it may be feared, in the native heart; at least there are notable instances to the contrary. Here is one. As all the world knows the British authorities have restored to Maharaja Sind a the fortress of Gwalior. The act was not only magnanimous in the extreme, but probably there is not a Government extant that would have been so generous—at least our only rival in the East—to wit, "Holy Russia" once she lays her clutches upon a place, never, if she can help it, restores or withdraws. Moreover, it was a concession so enlightened, so much in advance of, and so unlike the "zabardasti" policy of Native States and Native rulers, that it might have been thought the Native Press would have been completely overwhelmed at the consideration shown to a potentate of their own kith and kin. Not so; they never complain that Sindia has been unjustly deprived of his ancestral property for a length of time. Again we repeat where is gratitude?

THE silver question is always perplexing everybody. This week we acknowledge that we are the unhappy sufferers. Our brain is all agog, and why? Just because we have read that though admittedly Government is a heavy sufferer by the fall in the value of the Rupee, equally the country is a gainer; but we had always thought that the Government was but the "outward and visible sign," typifying the nation at large. If so, how can the two have divergent interests? We confess we do not understand the silver question.

ANCIENT INDIA.*

In this volume Mr. McCrindle approaches the end of his long self-imposed task of placing before us, with annotations, "Ancient India, as described by the Classical Authors." We have already had, as the result of his elaborate and careful investigations, the description of India by Megasthenes, Arrian and Ktesias the Cnidian, as well as the dissertation on "the commerce and navigation of the Erythrean Sea," the last founded on the Periplus, and the observations of Nearchus, the renowned Admiral of Alexander the Great. We now, coming a stage further down in ancient geography, have Ptolemy's account both of India, Further India, and Central Asia, and the series is to be concluded by a volume including "Strabo's Geography of India, and the accounts of the Makedonian Invasion of India given by Arrian and Curtius." A fair lifetime's work, we should say, for any ordinary man, were we at liberty to rank Mr. McCrindle in any such category. We shall confine our remarks to the volume before us, which presents, to anyone who is capable of taking interest in the subject to which it relates, so many noticeable features.

Ptolemy, at once "Mathematician, Musician, Astronomer, and Geographer," and distinguished in all these pursuits, is justly described by Mr. McCrindle as "altogether one of the most accomplished men of science that antiquity produced." That modern discoveries should have shown imperfections and errors in his works is no more than any reasonable critic would have expected. Yet his merits were surpassing, and (considering his sources of information) our author by no means overrates them in saying in the Introduction to this book that his methods "were such as presented a near approximation to some of those which are still in use among modern Geographers." Let any one reflect what this, and his computation, however occasionally erroneous, of latitude and longitude, in the second century of our æra mean, and he may well be astounded at the philosopher's penetration and prevision.

When, in Europe, we have, at the present time, such varying names for the same places as:—La Haye and 'sGravenhage, Wien and Vienna, Diedenhofen and Thionville, Regensburg and Ratisbon—not to speak of scores of others which might be mentioned—we can hardly be surprised if the identification of the names of Oriental mountains, rivers, and cities, as used centuries back, and filtered, so to speak, to us through the medium of a foreign language, becomes all but impossible. Many errors are, no doubt, as Mr. McGrindle mentions (p.p 112, 126, 202, 231) due to the carelessness of successive transcribers of Ptolemy's manuscript. Many more are to be ascribed to the inveterate tendency of the Greeks—to whom all foreign nations, however advanced in civilisation, were "barbarians," to jump at the nearest approximation to the Native name, which had a signification, no matter of what kind, in their own tongue. Of this some curious instances occur. Not infrequently the real meaning of the name was ascertained, and forthwith rendered into corresponding Greek words.

For instance (p. 166), the "gurb," or fort, was taken out of Bandogurb, and translated into Balantipyrgon, the corresponding Greek word for a fort or citadel. Even a more striking case is that of Pentagramma, a place some forty-five miles south-west of Mount Mahabun, known to the Greeks as Aornos. Its modern name is "Punjpur, which agrees closely, both in its position and the signification of its name (five towns), with the Pentagramma of Ptolemy." Thus Penjdeh, if (as is likely enough) it existed in Alexander's time, and had been noticed in the records of his invasion, would probably have figured as Pentoikiai. Similarly, Auraogrammum is Auradpura, the meaning in either case being identical—the town, or residence, of Anuradha.

Another, not the least difficulty, and about the last which (but for the remembrance of the fatal word Shibboleth) one would have expected to meet outside Cockney-land, is the habitual failure in some quarters to pronounce the aspirate (see p. 82). This, in some nations, seems an impossibility. The French rarely sound the h, the Spaniards scarcely ever; its disuse in Italian, a language more guttural than French, and nearly as much so as Spanish, has passed into the proverb, "it is not worth an h," as can be daily heard from Milan to Brindisi.

Difficulties such as these, confronting the would-be investigator at every point, would fatally impede the unlearned inquirer, and to surmount them calls into requisition rare intelligence, ingenuity, and skill, as well as the mere possession of learning; and the way in which successive investigators have succeeded in finding their way through impediments so curiously complicated deserves more cordial recognition than it is, from the average of readers of works of this character, likely to receive.

Mr. McGrindle has performed his task in collating authorities, and in giving to the reader, in the fewest possible words, the results of his researches, in a manner deserving of the warmest commendation; and we are using no mere form of words when expressing our sincere regret that want of space compels us to curtail our remarks on his very valuable and interesting work.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

We have received with much pleasure the first number of this Review, and wish it all the success which, under Mr. Boulger's Editorship, it can hardly fail to attain.

A Review, dealing with the largest Continent of the Old World, has to touch on a variety of subjects so great, we may almost say so endless, that one may expect from it information about lands, if not "from China to Peru," at least from China (not to speak of Japan) to Persia, and even further West. And this anticipation we find fully realised in the opening number, which contains two carefully-written articles on China, and one (by Professor Vambéry) on the Turks in Persia and the Caucasus.

We have more than once referred to the important part which China must inevitably play in Central Asian affairs; and to the absolute necessity which exists for a "solidarity" between our own, and the Celestial, Government as regards a joint resistance to the encroachments of Russia. The absorption of Upper Burma was not at that time "within the range of practical politics;" though the value of a Chinese alliance must have been visible to all but the purblind. Now, by the annexation of Burma, the contact has been effected, the galvanic circle completed: in Tibet and in Western China we touch the Celestial Empire. And it is interesting to learn, from Mr. Boulger's article on "Early English Enterprise in the Far East," to which the place of honour must be assigned, what was the nature of our earliest communications with China, Tonking, and Japan. Those, however, who have not had access to such sources of information on the latent military strength of China as are contained—to mention no other work—in Mr. Boulger's Central Asian Papers, may profitably consider our future, rather than our past, relations with the Celestials. And, in a Review which numbers among its contributors its Editor, Professor Douglas, and Shway Yoe, we need entertain no fear that a matter which is, really, the vital point (and this, as we have reason to know, the Russians see as plainly as we do) in our Central Asian policy, will remain unnoticed. Shway Yoe's account of the "Chinese Brave" well deserves careful consideration. All the world knows that the French army never won a really permanent success in Tonking. Whether it was that, as in Cæsar's time, they could not sustain the elan of their onslaught (Galli impetum non sustinent), or that the dogged imperturbability of the Chinese foiled them, the result was the same. The fearful brutality which seems innate in Frenchmen of the lower class, and which shows itself most especially in time of war, did not prevent the Chinese from meeting them at every point, and from making their very victories successes rather in name than in fact.

As to the restoration to Scindia of Gwalior, which has been so long delayed that scarcely a Native journal can be found to give us a good word for it, we have already plainly spoken. Sir L. Griffin, who, in an article, justifies (what needed no justification) "The Restitution of Gwalior Fort," will do well to advocate the neglected claims of the Holkar.

Sir George Birdwood's Paper on the Christmas Tree, if somewhat discursive, has at least the merit of being complete and exhaustive. He, very carefully and well, traces the origin of the tree not to Germany only, whence it would seem (p. 19) that we got it through the instrumentality of a German girl, servant of Queen Caroline (though "Bluff King Hal" had a gold—probably gilded—tree set before him at some Christmas pageants at Richmond), but to that immutable East whence we have assuredly derived most of our older customs; and he quotes passages which allude to the tree-worship (in his opinion Phallic) of the ancient Phœnicians and of other Oriental nations. That a qualified cultus of trees, as the emblems of fertility, came from Asia to Europe, there can be no doubt. But how far this cultus was directly connected with the mysterious Phallic rites, respecting which so much remains to be investigated, may, perhaps, notwithstanding the long chain of circumstantial evidence which Sir G. Birdwood has adduced, still be considered an open question. That, in colder climes, the selection of evergreen trees points to a yearning for the renaissance of vegetation is likely enough. Certainly the well-known German apostrophe to the fir-tree indicates this:—

"O fir-tree dear, O Christmas tree,
How faithful are thy leaves to thee!
Green not alone in summer-time, the whole stress being laid on the viridity of the tree selected as an emblem of the idea to be commemorated.
Green too in winter's snow and rime," &c.

Perhaps few papers in the Review will attract more notice than Colonel Yule's, to which he gives the eccentric name Hobson-Jobson-iana—"Hobson Jobson" being, as the Colonel shows (p. 132) by a series of the queerest transmutations, the outcome of the well-known Mussulman cry, "Ya Hasan! Ya Hosain!" This amusing Essay is really an etymological omnium gatherum of words habitually used in Anglo-Indian conversation. Colonel Yule's attainments as a linguist are so well known that one is hardly surprised to find him quoting a language which—not on account of lack of beauty or energy—is so undeservedly neglected as Portuguese. We are not quite clear about all his deductions, though some of them—especially those deriving Anglo-Indian words from the double origin of European and Oriental parlance—are extremely ingenious. Of this, "boy," still habitually used by English in China as equivalent to "servant," and originating alike in our well-known word, and in the Hindi-Marathi "Bhoi," is the most familiar instance. It would seem, indeed, that no one or two languages have been sufficient to "fill the capacious maw" of the Anglo-Indian. We have—not to mention the languages of the country—Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, and not a little Chinese. And we even borrow from Mongoli. Few old Indians who have habitually used such a phrase as "The old bukshes is an awful bahadur, but he keeps a first-rate bobachee" (the old paymaster is an awful swaggerer, but he keeps a first-rate cook), would be aware that the words which we have italicised were words habitually used by the conquerors of China.

To the remaining articles which go to fill up an excellent first issue we have no space to refer in detail; though Professor Vambéry's paper on the Turks in the Caucasus, and, especially, in Persia, is very suggestive, and might well receive, from the Foreign Office, more attention than it is likely to get. Persia, Turkey, and, even more emphatically, China, are our three main instruments to counteract Russia. And in two of the three we are not represented by an Ambassador! The worthy old gentleman accredited to the Porte will, on his arrival, whenever that event may occur, simply oust a far more experienced man, and the future Envoy to Peking is, we believe, "kicking his heels" somewhere in Europe. Is it not time for the Foreign Office to place itself in a position to have authoritative intelligence, from really competent representatives, of what is going on among peoples on whose action the prosperity, we may almost say the stability, of the British Empire so largely depends?

With a word of commendation for Colonel Malleson's interesting account of Akbar's childhood we must conclude our notice of this excellent first number. A Review, dealing exclusively with matters Oriental, has long been an acknowledged desideratum; and the "Asiatic Quarterly" bids fair not only to supply this, but on its own merits to rise to a high position in periodical literature.

TEA IN INDIA.

THERE is, perhaps, scarcely any one article of commerce in the production of which India has, comparatively speaking, made, under British rule, greater strides, than in that to which we propose to devote a few words. When we read of importations to England of millions of pounds, of 17,000,000 of pounds being stored in London alone in June, 1883, we are tempted to ask whence so huge an industry took its rise?—and when we find that it had no existence before our advent, we cannot help feeling that when, in obedience to the wishes of Mr. H. J. S. Cotton and the Calcutta Babus, we “scuttle” out of India, we shall, their taunts notwithstanding, leave some one thing behind us besides empty champagne- and beer-bottles.

It is, however, not a little curious to find that Chinese tradition points to India as being the original home of the tea plant. “A Brahman ascetic, named Dharmas, went,” says the tale, “as a missionary to China. Wearied with a toilsome journey, he fell fast asleep on reaching his destination; and, on awaking, angry at such weakness, he tore out his eyebrows. The hairs, taking root, became tea-plants, the leaves of which he tasted, and was soothed into mystic meditation.” Whether it be owing to some tradition of this kind, or to the actual existence of a kind of down on the leaves, that one of the finest kinds of China tea is denominated Pekoe, or Pecco, “white hairs,” we are not called on to decide, though the coincidence is at least remarkable. Yet the fact that the tea-plant is indigenous to India seems not to have been known to Europeans till the beginning of the present century; though, so far back as 1788, on the suggestion of that great statesman, Warren Hastings, to whom India owes so much, inquiries had been made (by Sir Joseph Banks) as to the districts most suitable for tea cultivation.

The investigation was, however, confined to one point, how far a district was, in soil and climate, adapted to tea plants imported from China; and Colonel Kyd, who is honourably mentioned by Dr. Balfour, in his excellent “Cyclopædia of India,” as the pioneer of Indian tea cultivation, was content with forming in Calcutta—what afterwards became the nucleus of the Calcutta Botanic Garden—“a tea-garden with plants from Canton.”

It was not till 1815 that “a Bengal Lieut.-Colonel” (whose name the Encyclopædist ought surely to have recorded) brought to notice the existence of the plant in North-Eastern India; and, a few years later, a specimen—still preserved in London—was sent to Government by the Commissioner of Assam, the Province still the headquarters of the tea-culture.

How enormously, growing from these small beginnings, the cultivation of the tea-plant has spread, how it extends not only from the Punjab to Assam, the prosperity of which Province in a great degree depends on it, but through a large portion of Southern India, and, across the narrow channel, into Ceylon, of which island it forms one of the most important exports, no reader needs to be told.

Nor does there seem any limit to the possible, and even probable, expansion of its production. The Pioneer long since commented on this. “A few figures,” says our contemporary, “will illustrate the strides which production is making. The crop of 1884 throughout all India (excluding Ceylon) was 63 million pounds, of which Assam furnished 48½ and Darjeeling 10½ millions. The crop of 1885 is estimated at 68½ millions. Then Ceylon exported 1½ million pounds in nine months of 1883-84 and 2½ million pounds in the same nine months of 1884-85. The increase in production during a single year may therefore be reckoned at 4 or 5 million pounds, even after a large reduction for over-liberal estimates. This means an additional supply sufficient to meet the wants of a million new consumers.”

Of this productive power of our great dependency the Chinese are naturally jealous. They no longer exclusively supply the world with tea, not even, as of yore, with tea-plants, for the Australians, who are trying their ‘prentice hand at tea-growing, got their plants and seed from Assam.

It is worth noting that our Indian Teas fail to suit the palates of our Northern and North-Western neighbours. It is well known that it is not always easy to get them pure in England, where they are largely used for blending with China teas; and where dealers possibly presume on a palate which, as regards tea (as well as coffee), is in all conscience artificial enough. Yet it is disappointing to think that we should miss so good a market as that presented by the Trans-frontier tribes. Long since we read, in a passage well worth quoting, that—

Any Bhutia at Dawangari will tell you that our tea has not the twang and colour that he likes. The bunnias who come to meet him with salt and piece-goods know better than to risk their money on a venture in Indian tea. In fact, before making any assumption as to the market for Indian tea in Tibet, it is wise to consider a moment why the Tibetans drink tea, and what are the precise qualities that they value in it. Life in Tibet is peculiarly trying to the physical energies. The rarefied air, the intense cold, the severe labour of climbing up and down enormous steep tasks human powers of endurance to the utmost. The inhabitants of such a country require a stimulant which has a sustaining as well as a quickening power. In “Hooker's Himalayan Journals” we have authentic witness that tea as the Tibetans make it is the very best stimulant in cases of exhaustion from exposure or great fatigue. The way they make it is described by the Abbé Desgodius. The tea which has been fermented for a week to begin with is boiled until “the juice is of a brown, nearly chestnut colour, with a strong smell and taste, as if forest detritus had been boiled instead of tea; the darker the juice, the stronger the smell, the better is the tea for the Tibetan market.

And, not so long since, the Indian Tea Gazette told us the same thing. It is possible that, as the Englishman thinks:—

Mr. Macaulay's mission to China may, perhaps, be the means of reducing the present restrictions on the importation of Indian tea into Thibet. It is, the Gazette adds, believed that good Darjeeling tea could be laid down at Lhasá for eight annas a pound, which is the price of the worst China tea, the second best quality of China tea obtaining a price of Rs. 1-6 a pound. The Thibetans do not like the flavour of the coarse tea sold in the Dārjiling bazaars, as they find it too bitter; but the idea is that if the Dārjiling tea were not fired they would find it more palatable.

(It may be observed that the removal of restrictions on traffic in an article no one wants is of no great value.)

That an enormous traffic in brick tea subsists between China and the Siberians, the Kirghis tribes, and Central Asia generally, is well known; and one can, in the face of the dismal prognostications so often hazarded regarding the future of the Indian tea trade, hardly help inquiring why nothing is being done on our side to obtain a participation in so profitable a commercial enterprise.

THE INDIAN MILITARY MANŒUVRES.

The Indian military manœuvres have attracted much notice in India. The best compressed account of them up to the 13th is that which follows:—

The military manœuvres are approaching completion. A telegram from Delhi, dated the 13th inst., says:—The armies under Generals Greaves and Charles Gough, numbering each 16,000 men of all arms, advancing from Delhi and Umballa respectively, met on the 7th inst. on the historic plain of Paniput. Owing to the presence of native contingents from Cashmere, Puttiala, Jheend, and Nabha, who took an important and successful part in the operations, General Greaves with the Northern Army, had a superior force of 3,000 infantry with eight guns.

General Gough was entirely deceived as to the direction of the enemy's attack. Owing to the failure of a cavalry reconnaissance General Macfarlane's division surprised him on the right flank and the victory rested with the Northern force, confirming the records of history regarding previous battles at Paniput.

On Friday night 35,000 fighting men and 30,000 camp followers were encamped at Paniput. On Saturday the contending forces separated. On Monday the movement towards Delhi commenced. The Southern General was ordered to stay his advance, and the Southern force intrenched itself in a position near Badlee Serai, three miles distant, and north of Delhi. The Northern army, reinforced by 5,000 men, attacked the position on Friday.

The marching of the troops has hitherto been carried out with extraordinary facility and success, owing chiefly to the immensely improved and efficient transport service, and the high discipline of the Army; and the untiring and successful exertions of the civil authorities, under Mr. Macbabb, Commissioner of Delhi, are acknowledged and appreciated by the whole of the force. The foreign officers express great pleasure at the arrangements made for their reception and accommodation. They manifest astonishment at the thorough excellence and efficiency of the Native troops. Such troops had previously been seen by some of them in Malta and in Egypt, and were then considered to be picked specially, and therefore not representative of the whole Army.

The final operations will be witnessed by Scindia, Holkar, and the Princes ruling Cashmere, Bhurtore, Bhopal, Dholpore, Rutlam, Rampur, Faridkote, Cooch Behar, the ex-Ameer Yakoub Khan, and many others. The Viceroy will arrive on Sunday, and leave again on Wednesday. He will witness the Army sports on Monday, and a grand review to be held on Tuesday, at 11 o'clock in the morning. The greatest interest is evinced by the final operations by the Native population. The general health of both Armies is excellent.

The Commander-in-Chief, General Roberts, though not "extreme to mark what is done amiss," animadverted, in reviewing the operations of the 7th inst., on the want of dash and enterprise displayed by the cavalry of the Southern force, and especially on the insufficient character of the information acquired by their means, but praised the commander of the Northern cavalry for his efficient discharge of the difficult task assigned to him on the 8th inst. General Roberts remarked on the failure of the Southern general to intrench his position during the long development of the attack of the Northern force; on the too speedy abandonment of the very strong position at Kabri village, to the left of his position; on the very unfavourable position occupied by his cavalry brigade, among its own infantry and under heavy artillery and infantry fire at short range; and also on the defective scouting of the cavalry brigade of the Southern force, which failed entirely to elicit the important information regarding the enemy's main and real attack, which was directed later on the right flank; this brigade itself being outflanked by the Northern cavalry, which movement resulted in the loss to it of some guns.

The plan of attack of the Northern force and the feigned attack of Kabri were greatly praised by General Roberts, by whom, lastly, strict attention was called to the matter of firing discipline and the unnecessary expenditure of ammunition previous to the opposed forces being actually in collision.

To take leave to England as a humble officer and return to India as a peer of the realm has been the fortunate fate of Captain Maitland, now Lord Lauderdale.

OBITUARY.

SIR GEORGE U. YULE.

We can give no better obituary notice of Sir G. Yule than the following, for which we are indebted to the St. James's Gazette:—

Sir George Yule died on Wednesday morning at Bayswater, of internal injuries received in a fall on the icy pavement five days before. He was born at Inveresk, near Edinburgh, in 1813, the eldest son of Major William Yule, a retired Indian officer, known in the small circle of Orientalists of those days as no mean Persian scholar, and whose collection of MSS.—characterised by Dr. Rien, in his Persian Catalogue, as "of considerable extent and great value"—was presented to the British Museum by Sir George and his brothers (1847-50).

At sixteen he entered Haileybury, and two years later passed out in the Bengal Civil Service. His work for a quarter of a century was in the populous but obscure districts of Eastern Bengal. He gradually became known to the Government for his activity and good sense, but won a far wider reputation as a mighty hunter, alike with hog spear and double-barrel. Thirty years ago the roll of his slain tigers exceeded four hundred, some of them of special fame.

He was first called from his obscurity in 1856. The year before, the Sonthals in insurrection disturbed the long unbroken peace of the Delta. These were a numerous non-Aryan, uncivilized, but industrious race, driven wild by local mismanagement, and oppressions of Hindoo usurers acting through the regulation courts. After the suppression of their rising, Yule was selected by Sir F. Halliday, who knew his man, to be Commissioner of the Bhagulpur Division, containing some 6,000,000 souls, and embracing the hill country of the Sonthals.

Mr. Yule was thus engaged when the Mutiny broke out, and it soon made itself felt in the districts under him. To its suppression within his limits he addressed himself with characteristic vigour. He scoured the trans-Gangetic districts, routing the mutineers on more than one occasion, and out-manceuvring them by his astonishing marches, till he succeeded in driving them across the Nepal frontier. No part of Bengal was at any time in such danger, and nowhere was the danger more speedily and completely averted.

After this Mr. Yule served for two or three years as Chief Commissioner of Oudh; and for four or five as Resident at Hyderabad.

From Hyderabad he was promoted to the Governor-General's Council; but he was hardly in his place there. Few with his opportunities had shown more the gift of ruling men by personal influence; but this Government in Council was quite another matter, and under the sedentary life his health broke down. He retired after about a year of Simla (1869).

We may finish this sketch in the words of Sir F. Halliday:—"He was in aspect, as in mind, mild and benevolent; but with a righteous intolerance of wrong-doing, a suspicion of which in any quarter caused instantly to blaze forth that ingenium perfervidum Scotorum, of which under the mild exterior there lurked always a full share, to be displayed on needful occasion. Not a few such men the Indian Civil Service has produced—most of them unknown to fame, but still remembered in the talk of Indian villages and market-places. None of them did better for India than George Yule; and no one has better deserved the affectionate remembrance of its people."

COLONEL HUTCHINSON.

A Reuter telegram from Bombay states that Colonel Hutchinson, of the Guides, who was severely wounded in the engagement between the Guides and a party of the blockaded tribe of Bunerwals, has succumbed to his wounds. Lieutenant-Colonel Robert Colvin Hutchinson was born on the 4th of March, 1842. He was appointed ensign in the Madras Infantry on December 9, 1859, became lieutenant January 1, 1862, captain April 13, 1873, and major on December 9, 1879, all promotions being in the same corps. Lieutenant-Colonel Hutchinson served with a detachment of the Corps of Guides Cavalry on the surprise of the Utman Kheyl village of Sapri on February 15, 1878. He was also present in the operations against the Razizai village of Skhakat on March 14, 1878, and in the attack on the Utman Kheyl villages on March 21, 1878. He served with the Corps of Guides in the Afghan war of 1878-80, and was present at the capture of Ali Musjid and in the engagements round Cabul in December, 1879, and at Charasiab on April 25, 1880, for which latter service he obtained the medal with two clasps.

A CONCERT, under the able direction of Miss Agnes Richardson, was given at the Gresham Hall, Brixton, on the 15th inst., in aid of the poor of the parish of St. George the Martyr. It may not be generally known that this parish is one of the poorest in London, and we are glad, therefore, to learn that the concert met with deserved success. In spite of the inclemency of the weather the hall was well filled.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers.
This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

No. 6, LANCASTER PLACE, STRAND, W.C.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

OUR advices by the present Mail are, from Bombay, to the 8th Jan.; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad, to the 6th Jan.

WE subjoin, as containing the latest intelligence, extracts from the telegrams, dated 24th inst., of the Times correspondent at Calcutta :—

The announcement in the Queen's Speech that Upper Burma has been permanently incorporated in the Empire sets at rest the doubts raised by the somewhat ambiguous language of the Viceregal proclamation. It had been stated in various quarters that annexation was not intended, or, at any rate, not decided upon, and that the Proclamation of January 1 was meant only to get rid of the international engagements contracted by Thebaw. The Queen's Speech, if correctly reported, puts an end to these doubts.

The announcement of the annexation was received with delight by all except a few determined adherents of the non-interference school, and it will go far to put an end to troubles which owe their origin to the uncertainty regarding the future more than to any other cause.

The Viceroy, with Lady Dufferin, the Commander-in-Chief, and a large party, will start for Mandalay about the 30th, and will be absent about a month. It may be expected that the chief subjects for his consideration will be the arrangements to be made with China, and the future government of Burma.

Regarding the former, it is generally felt here that the Ministry will do wisely to meet the Chinese Government half-way in its request for a rectification of frontier. The friendship of China is too valuable to be lightly thrown away, and as all that England requires is the valley of the Irrawaddy, she would not be paying too high a price for that friendship by making over to China the Eastern portion of Upper Burma.

The question of how the new province is to be administered is also one of the gravest importance. Most of the authorities seem to be agreed that it must, at least for the present, be kept distinct from Lower Burma, and that it would be a great mistake to introduce the administrative and judicial systems of older provinces. The course which commends itself to most persons is similar to the one followed when the Punjab was annexed—namely, that of carrying on the government by means of specially selected officers, taking orders direct from the Viceroy.

The Tynedah Mengyee is now in Calcutta. It is believed that he will stay here for about a fortnight, and then go to Cuttack.

A general meeting of the supporters of Lady Dufferin's fund will be held here on Wednesday, when the Viceroy will preside. The success of the fund exceeds all anticipations. Several of the Native princes have given munificent donations.

BEFORE leaving Delhi General Roberts dined at the mess of the twelve foreign officers who had witnessed the manoeuvres. The spokesman on the occasion was the Italian Colonel Saletta, who, speaking for himself and comrades said, inter alia :—

In thanking the Commander-in-Chief we thank the whole army for the cordial welcome accorded us. But before our departure we wish to declare our thanks for the exquisite courtesy of General Roberts and the unceasing courteous attentions of Colonel Upperton and the distinguished officers associated with him. Our every want or desire has been anticipated and amply provided for.

Regarding the manoeuvres our individual opinions possibly differ on technical military points. But we are unanimous in other matters, in admiring the fine spirit reigning among the English officers, their superior education, and the smartness which constitutes them a veritable corps d'élite—a body of true gentlemen. We also admiringly noted the regularity and calmness evinced in the manoeuvres of the infantry and their magnificent solidity, and the proud, martial bearing of the cavalry and artillery. The calm and courteous bearing of the army in all circumstances has also called forth our homage, as well as the moderation displayed in military criticism.

RUSSIANS and Italians, like Russians and French, have, of late, been étroitement liés. It may not be wholly without significance that the Russian and Italian officers are the only ones who are going to inspect Peshawur and the North-West Frontier.

THE discussion by the Viceroy's Legislative Council of the new Income Tax Bill, which has been much modified by the Select Committee, will be concluded, and the Bill passed, next Friday.

THE Gazette contains the formal notification of the appointments of Sir H. Macpherson and Sir C. G. Arbuthnot to be Commanders-in-Chief at Madras and Bombay respectively. The former officer has already started for India.

WE read in the Times :—

The India Council on Wednesday sold bills for Rs.1,00,000 on Calcutta and Rs.10,000 on Bombay at 1s. 6 1-32d. per rupee. The allotments reported amount altogether to Rs.28,63,956, including the following items :—Calcutta, bills, Rs.5,90,600, at 1s. 5 31-32d., Rs.7,00,000, at 1s. 6 1-32d., and telegraphic transfers for Rs.1,20,000, at 1s. 6d.; Madras, bills for Rs.60,000, at 1s. 5 31-32d.; and Bombay, bills for Rs.23,356, at 1s. 5 31-32d., Rs.10,00,000, at 1s. 6d., and Rs.3,70,000, at 1s. 6 1-32d. per rupee. The fact that telegraphic transfers are again being asked for is a sign that the demand for remittances is pretty strong. For some time past the inquiry has been entirely for bills.

To this the Statist adds, writing on Saturday :—

Next week 35 lacs of Council Bills will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to January 19th, inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.8,68,76,569, realising £6,664,054. To the corresponding date last year Rs.11,71,90,318, realising £9,515,202, had been disposed of.

THE nominations of members to the Viceregal Legislative Council are Rajah Amir Hasan, Khan Bahadur, Amir-ud-Daulah, Saiyid-ul-Mulk, Mumtaz Jang, Talukdar of Mahmudabad in Oudh. The Hon. W. W. Hunter, C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D., of the Bengal Civil Service, is reappointed.

WE are rejoiced that there is at last some chance of a fairly representative Indian team figuring at Wimbledon next July. We read :—

Endeavours are being made to secure a representative team of Indian Volunteers for Wimbledon next year; and Mr. J. M. Cook, managing partner of Messrs. Thomas Cook and Sons, managers of Tours and Excursions, now passing through Calcutta, has intimated his willingness to subscribe 100 rupees to the fund, and to assist the team in any way he can, either in London or at the camp on Wimbledon Common. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has also sent a donation of 100 rupees, and wishes every success to the object, which he considers a most worthy one. Major Browne, commanding the Presidency Volunteers, has become honorary secretary of the Indo-Wimbledon Team Fund. It is anticipated that if every enrolled member of the several Volunteer Corps in India were each to subscribe eight annas to one rupee, a sufficient sum would be collected to meet all the necessary expenses, and place the fund on a sure and permanent footing. The scheme deserves the warmest support from every Volunteer, all of whom should try their best to assist, so that a really representative team of the best shots might be enabled to compete on behalf of India, at the great Volunteer gathering at Wimbledon in July next. There is no time to be lost in settling the preliminaries; and money is the greatest need to be supplied in order to establish the scheme. Every corps should form a sub-committee to collect subscriptions from Volunteers, and the Central Committee would then be able to communicate full information respecting the fund, enabling every Volunteer to acquaint himself with its objects and with others to compete for a place in the team, if so disposed.

THE reports on the state of the season and prospects of the crops for the week ending December 16th, 1885, show that during the week under report rain has fallen generally throughout the Madras Presidency, the Berars, the Central Provinces, and the North-Western Provinces and Oudh. Slight rain has also fallen in Mysore and in a few districts in the Punjab, Bombay, Bengal, and Assam. From one or two places in Central India and Rajputana slight showers are also reported. The standing crops are generally in good condition in Madras, and those which are being harvested promise an average outturn. In Bellary and Anantapur prospects continue favourable. In Mysore and Coorg crops are good. In parts of the Bombay Presidency more rain is wanted for the rabi crops, the sowing of which has been nearly completed in most districts. The kharif harvest is nearly over. In the Berars and Hyderabad the rabi promises well, and in Central India and Rajputana agricultural prospects are BEGGING letter-writing is an art in which Natives of India excel, but the following gem is somewhat unique:—"Sir,—Candour and generosity shine in all your words and actions, and exact the highest esteem of all who have the power to know you. None but a person of your good qualities and finished character is capable to be, for humanity's sake, a proper patron of a young man, without interest or connection like myself; and as I am writing this application a certain indescribable joy and hope gladdens my heart. I know that the homage I now pay you is offering a kind of violence to me who is as solicitous to shun applause as he is assiduous in deserving it. I studied up to B.A., and I obtained scholarships and a medal during my college career. I was recommended by Mr. —, a notable merchant of this city, to Mr. —, for a Deputy Collectorship, but as yet I have not been successful in procuring one. I venture to pray that you may be pleased to appoint me as a Deputy-Collector in a district where Bengalese is the vernacular language, and let me know that you patronise, for humanity's sake, those who would otherwise be condemned to obscurity by an unsympathetic and calculating world."

THEODORIC, the Ostrogothic king, who founded a monarchy in Italy towards the close of the fifth century, was so unlettered that he could not write his name, whereupon he ordered a metal plate to be made with a signature cut out, so that with a brush and paint he managed to daub something which passed muster for a royal superscription. None the less he was a monarch of more than ordinary intelligence. One instance will suffice. A widow in his kingdom chanced to be engaged to a young man of large possessions, but before the marriage was solemnized the woman's son returned to his mother's home, and revealed the unwelcome fact that the suitor would be husband number two instead of number one. To this the latter demurred, whereupon the unprincipled woman instantly disavowed her son. The matter came before Theodoric, who at once ordered the widow to marry the young man whom she denied as her offspring. This brought things to an issue, and she was compelled to acknowledge the relationship.

KING THEBAW, of massacre notoriety, seems to have accumulated a strange medley of articles in his palace at Mandalay—to wit, a dozen sewing machines, two perambulators, a billiard table, but clothes; vases of gold fish, huge boxes of candles, some feeding bottles, hundreds of small teak boxes, mostly empty, a cradle or two, a number of cheap pictures, including portraits of Queen Victoria and the Emperor William, Moses being found in the bulrushes by Pharaoh's daughter, Sir Walter Raleigh placing his cloak for Queen Bess to walk upon, and a battle scene in the Franco-German War, &c. Such is the curious list given by a correspondent of the Pioneer, and to crown all there were some glass chairs of State, ornamented with the badge and motto of the star of India—"Heaven's light our guide." What a mockery for a tyrant whose career left a wake of blood on the ocean of life to decorate his royal seats with an invocation to the God of Mercy and kindness!

FALL OF CONSTANTINOPLE.*

Towards the close of the twelfth century Saladin, the mighty conqueror, who had but recently captured Jerusalem, was gathered to his fathers, and history once again had to record a struggle amongst descendants for the kingdom of their ancestor: it also chanced that, at the same time as these internal dissensions were rending the Saracenic world, another great race of Muslim devastators which had threatened Europe, the Seljukian Turks, were compelled to turn their attention to a still more powerful and no less destructive horde, which, under the leadership of the well-known Genghis Khan, were darkening the horizon of the Eastern world.

The occasion seemed opportune for striking a blow for Christendom by snatching the holy cities from the hands of the Infidels, and it did not need the towering intellect, the mighty genius of Innocent III., at that time the reigning monarch in the chair of St. Peter at Rome, to discern that no such favourable chance would be likely again to occur. Thus it came about that the dawn of the twelfth century witnessed mighty preparations for the Fourth Crusade. There was no lack of men—for it was an age of faith—in whose breasts zeal for the Church was mingled with the love of chivalry and adventure so prominently characteristic of the Middle Ages; and within a brief period there flocked from all parts of Europe warriors of every rank, grade, and description—from the baron, with his feudal attendants, to the humble stripling who hoped to soothe his soul with doughty deeds in furtherance of his religion, and to cut with his sword the gordian knot of poverty which engirt his aspiring and enthusiastic ambition.

Thus far well; but now a difficulty arose. Guided by the experiences and the failures of previous crusades, the prime movers of the project determined to avoid the wearisome and hazardous march across the mainland to the appointed destination in Syria, and resolved to take a direct route by sea, hoping thereby to save the fatigue, the disease, and the casualties which on previous occasions had decimated their ranks and damped their ardour. Venice, then the principal maritime nation of Southern Europe, in consideration of receiving a sum equivalent to about £180,000 sterling, agreed to supply ships necessary to transport the warriors of Christendom to their destination. But when the time arrived for payment the whole of this huge amount was not forthcoming. The contract was violated. Another misfortune, too, befell the Crusaders in the death of their leader, Theobald, Earl of Champagne, whose place, after much discussion and many refusals, was supplied by Boniface, Marquis of Montferrat, with whom was associated the celebrated Dandolo, the Doge of Venice, who, though little short of ninety summers had wrinkled his brow, was young in intellect and vigorous in inception. Ever plotting and scheming to benefit his country, and indifferent alike to the aspirations and vows of the pious warriors of the Cross, this veteran intriguer proposed, as the only alternative short of payment of the stipulated money, a diversion against Zara, the capital of Dalmatia, at that time a place of considerable commercial importance, and, on the opposite coast, a rival to the fair Queen of the Adriatic. The scruples of the pious warriors were overcome; indeed, hemmed in a watery prison at Venice as they were, they had no alternative but to assent, and in a few weeks the emporium of trade lay prostrate at the foot of the conquering Crusaders. Christian soldiers had laid low in the dust a Christian city.

The winter of 1202-3 passed slowly away in discontent, heart-givings, and mistrust, but the chalice of bitterness was not yet drained. The immediate destination of the host from Europe was Egypt, then, as now, the weakest, but no less the most important, point under the Moslem sway; but Venice had, unknown to the Crusaders, concluded a treaty with the Sultan, agreeing to prevent an attack upon the land of the Pharaohs. So Dandolo endeavoured, and with success, to persuade his comrades in arms that before proceeding to the Holy Land they should use the occasion for an endeavour to place on the Imperial Throne of Constantinople the rightful heir of the throne, at the time an outcast and wanderer. Space precludes more than an allusion to the able and interesting chapter which Mr. Pears devotes to the consideration of the plot which changed the history of Europe, it must suffice to say that after difficulties, jealousies, scruples, and doubts had all been overcome the army of Filibusters—for to this pitch of degradation had the pious warriors of the Cross now fallen—arrived at the capital of the Roman kingdom on the 23rd of June, 1203. The defence was stubborn, but in the end the effete energies of a dying and decaying Empire were no match for the hardy enthusiasm of the Latin soldiers, and the finest and richest city in Christendom lay prostrate at the feet of the Christian despoilers. The orgies of plunder, spoliation, murder, and other vices too shocking and sickening to be mentioned then commenced; and history has to record one of the saddest and most infamous reigns of licence and licentiousness which the world has ever witnessed. Nothing, however sacred, escaped pollution, nothing, however holy, came forth from the ordeal unscathed; the worst passion of robbery and self-enrichment and lust tarnished the escutcheons of men sworn to defend the weak and to protect the oppressed. In vain will the annals of the world be searched for more heartbreaking scenes, more degrading sensualism, more unhallowed desecration, more indefensible brutalism, than disgraced the Fall of Constantinople.

Such is the story told by Mr. Pears in a way which leaves nothing to be desired; careful in his facts, and critical in his deductions, the reader follows him alike with interest and advantage. The subject is important when it is considered, to quote our talented author's own deduction, that "the capture of Constantinople by the Crusaders was the cause which brought about the fall of the Roman Empire in the East, and rendered its ultimate capture by the Turks both certain and easy," and the thoughtful student might, with profit, peruse a phase of the Eastern Question none too often examined, and certainly never more clearly, eloquently, and exhaustively set before the public than in the present valuable and attractive volume which Mr. Pears has been at so much pains to produce.

NOVELS BY THE EARL OF BEACONSFIELD, K.G.*

Whatever may be the shortcomings of the nineteenth century, it cannot be denied that it is an age of marvel. At every turn there is some mighty enterprise which astonishes and bewilders; rivers are spanned, mountains are tunnelled, even the very depths of the sea are rendered subservient to man's need that "knowledge shall run to and fro;" while as to machinery, it is so intricate as to bewilder the eye and withal so perfect as to be at the command of the veriest tyro. Not only, too, in great things, but alike in small matters, has the brain of invention and perseverance left its mark upon the sands of Time. A walk in the streets is scarcely possible without the offer for a penny of some simple but none the less ingenious device or clever design. But it may be questioned whether amidst all the array of wonders and mysteries anything stands out in greater prominence than the cheap literature which floods the country from end to end; and amongst the mass, it may safely be asserted, stand second to none the beautiful volumes, eleven in number, which Messrs. Longman have produced in the shape of a new edition of Disraeli's novels. The type is clear to a degree, the paper is as good as need be, the binding is simple and serviceable, and, to crown all, the general appearance of the books is such that they are an ornament rather than otherwise to the table. It seems almost incredible, but it is true, that the entire series, and there are about 500 pages in a volume, is produced at the inconsiderable sum of one shilling a novel.

It needs no praise on our part to increase the sale of writings which are known throughout the whole length and breadth of the civilised world, and wherever known no less admired; but for the benefit of those—possibly few—who have not read these charming works of fiction, as interesting as they are clever, we would be tempted to quote, as giving an insight into the inward recesses of the statesman who penned them, the sweet, touching dedication to Sybil:—"I would inscribe this work to one whose noble spirit and gentle nature ever prompt her to sympathise with the suffering, to one whose sweet voice has often encouraged, and whose taste and judgment have ever guided, its pages—the most severe of critics, but—a perfect wife!"

CLOSE OF THE INDIAN MILITARY MANŒUVRES.

The Indian military manœuvres closed on the 19th with a grand review and march past. The occasion being of so wholly exceptional a character, we reproduce in extenso the Times account of what took place:—

"The grand review took place before the Viceroy on the 19th January. As an exhibition of Imperial military strength, the majority of the component forces being recruited from a hundred alien races, it was a spectacle impossible to parallel in the world. The purely scenic effect of the display was greatly marred by unpropitious weather. The difficulties which the two armies had to contend with, the heavy rain, the strong wind, and the impassable mud, while they detracted from the outward brilliancy of the occasion, served to throw into relief the sterling qualities of pluck, perseverance, endurance, and discipline. Since the Volunteer review at Edinburgh no troops have been exposed to such extremes of disappointment and discomfort. And it must be remembered that all their accommodation was on the Cabul scale. The admirable bearing of the men to-day elicited hearty admiration and applause. There were many spectators, but the native element was unusually meagre. The troops numbered 35,000—709 of the total being officers, 2,600 artillery, 5,500 cavalry, and 27,000 infantry, with 130 guns and 22 elephants. This includes the native contingents. The force was drawn up on an immense plain to the north-east of Delhi, on which the Imperial assemblage took place, in two lines, in column of double companies, General Greaves with the northern force being on the right, and General Gough and the southern on the left. On the extreme left was the Native infantry. The two armies formed in front of the line of cavalry and artillery, which were drawn up in a second line behind. The Viceroy, who had breakfasted with the foreign officers, arrived at 11 A.M. The salute broke the clouds, and the rain commenced to fall in torrents, and continued to fall for four hours. The Viceroy was speedily wet through, but he remained on horseback without shelter throughout the review. Having been received with the customary honours, Lord Dufferin, accompanied by the chief foreign representatives and an immense staff of officers, proceeded to ride slowly down the lines to make an inspection. This operation took one hour, for each line was one mile long. On the Viceroy returning to the flagstaff he was vehemently cheered by the spectators. The march past immediately began, and continued incessantly for three hours. On the Viceroy's right at the flagstaff were the Commander-in-Chief, General Roberts, and the foreign representatives; on his left were Lord Reay, Sir C. Aitchison, Sir A. Lyall, Scindiah, and the rulers of Bhurtpore and Kishengurh. The Russian Prince Masloff was unable to attend the review owing to a severe fall from his horse. The Maharana of Dholpore paraded with the Central Indian Horse, of which he is a major.

"When the entire army had marched past at a walk, the cavalry and artillery trotted past. The whole army then reformed on its original alignment, and having advanced in review order gave a general salute with perfect precision. By reason of the execrable weather the galloping past of the artillery and cavalry was dispensed with. The marching past of the troops was, considering the circumstances, admirable. The saturated earth was churned into a morass by the first passage of the guns and cavalry, and the infantry was obliged to struggle ankle deep through the mud, the native troops especially having the greatest difficulty in keeping their shoes. The pluck and discipline of the troops were such that, notwithstanding every difficulty, they were able to present to the Viceroy a front as compact and well drilled as if the affair had been a regimental barrack-yard parade. The volunteers looked well, and elicited admiration. The formation adopted for the march past was the following:—The cavalry marched by squadrons, and the infantry by double companies. Many regiments were cheered, especially the Royal Horse Artillery, the 8th Hussars, the 11th Bengal Lancers, the 10th Bengal Lancers, the Guides, the Highlanders, the Scotch Rifles, the Rifle Brigade, the Goorkhas, the 45th Sikhs, the Border Regiment, and the Highland Light Infantry. Rattray's Sikhs, however, bore off the palm. The men of the Cheshire Regiment wore oak leaves in their helmets, and their colours were covered with laurels. The native contingents were also loudly applauded. The Viceroy left the ground at 3 P.M., amid hearty and prolonged cheering. He will leave for Calcutta to-morrow. General Macgregor leaves to-night for the frontier, in connection with the outbreak of the Bonerwals. On Tuesday the Viceroy received the foreign representatives in the Commander-in-Chief's camp. Lord Dufferin was present in the afternoon at the cavalry sports, in which the élite of the European and native troops competed. The games were opened by General Roberts, who took the first tent peg in brilliant style. The foreign representatives will leave on Thursday evening, via Agra, Cawnpore, Lucknow, and Benares, for Calcutta, where they will separate. Many, however, will proceed to travel about India at leisure.

"The Viceroy in the course of his speech to the foreign officers at the conclusion of the parade, after warmly enlogising the bearing of the Army, dwelt upon the duty which devolves upon diplomatists to render war a lost and forgotten art. He continued:—"Whatever my professional instincts might have been as an Ambassador, I am free to confess that as Governor-General of India my desire for the maintenance of peace is still further intensified. Most heartily do I pray that the wisdom of all the governments, and the calmness and moderation of public opinion in the different countries of the world may confine the efforts of all nations to such mimic warfare as that which you, gentlemen, have witnessed on the plains of India; and that in Asia, as in Europe, the beneficent triumphs of civilisation may never be marred or interrupted by the terrible necessities of war."

BURMA AND THE BURMESE.

At the Society of Arts a paper was read on Friday by Mr. J. G. Scott (Shway Yoe), entitled, "Burma, the Eastern Country, and the Race of the Brahmas." Sir Ashley Eden presided, and there was a good attendance. Mr. Scott dealt largely in his paper with the history of Burma, and the social and religious manners and customs of the people, and the various topics were treated with the skill and acumen which would naturally have been looked for in one who has had considerable acquaintance with the land and its people; while an under-current of humour added not a little to the interest of the paper. Mr. Scott observed that there could be no doubt that the population of British Burma are quite satisfied with English rule. That they should grumble at taxation was only natural, that being a complaint common to all peoples. If an income tax were imposed, the principle of which existed in the national Burmese system, the general result would be more equitable. Particular care would have to be exercised in this respect in the new province, where the people were poverty-stricken, and they had no notion why taxes were collected, except for the special benefit of their rulers. There was abundance of fertile lands, and great demand for rice, and also for European manufactured articles. No doubt the wonderful increase in wealth which had taken place in Lower Burma under British rule would in time be equalled in the newly acquired district. A brief discussion followed; and the Chairman, in proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, said he was afraid some exaggerated views of the probable financial results that would accrue from the annexation had been entertained. There was, however, no other course open to the Government; although in process of time it might be found advisable to make special arrangements for the government of the country. The Chairman, in passing, alluded to the loss that had been sustained by the death of Sir Arthur Playre, the first and best Governor of British Burma.

INDIAN INTELLIGENCE DEPARTMENT.

It is now some weeks since attention was called, in more journals than one, to the defective condition of the Indian Intelligence Department. A good deal might be said about the Intelligence Department in India, which country is now swarming with Russian Emissaries. To this matter we propose to revert. Meanwhile the subjoined remarks, which appeared some time since in the Madras Mail, and well depict the present state of matters, may well be reproduced:—

"There never was a Government so badly supplied with information beyond its borders as that of Great Britain or of India. In the olden time the Intelligence Department in this country, at least as regarded military operations, was remarkably well served. The Natives still speak of the days when their fathers and grandfathers, on bringing in useful information, were bidden to thrust both hands into a sack of rupees and carry away as many as they could grasp. The actual amount could not have been very great, but the Eastern imagination was struck by the seeming generosity and confidence displayed by the Feringhee conquerors. Such a system contrasted painfully with the four rupees now grudgingly counted into the hands of a man who had risked his life to find out what was passing in the enemy's camp. In existing circumstances neither plan would answer. What is now urgently wanted is a certain number of highly intelligent, observant, devoted Mussulmans, paid moderately for their immediate services, but having in view a liberal recompense in the shape of a grant of land with an honorary Native title, something better "understood of the people," than the C.S.I. or the C.I.E. Major Montgomerie's surveyors have shown what perfect trustfulness may be reposed in Native sagacity, loyalty and endurance. For the purpose under consideration, it would probably be necessary to employ only Mussulmans, of whom any number might be selected by such men as Sir A. C. Lyall or Sir Lepel Griffin. They would go forth disguised as fakirs, pilgrims, and peddlers, and would constitute a counterpoise to the swarm of Russian 'explorers' and others who have been sent to spy into the nakedness of the land. There can be nothing more fatuous than to abide still, waiting for the roasted capons to drop from the sky on to our dinner table. Whatever may have happened in the Pays de Cocagne, in the times of legend and fable, nothing is now to be had without hard labour and much attrition of intellects. In the long run ignorance costs far more than knowledge. It is idle to complain of the defectiveness of the information received from Central Asia when no trouble is taken to correct what is amiss, or to supplement the ordinary sources of intelligence by other devices. Our position is that of an army crossing a waterless desert in which the scanty wells are dry, or afford only a turbid moisture of foul mud. To save human life the barren soil has to be bored until water is reached and a sufficient supply procured for the wants of man and beast. The Government now stands on the verge of a tremendous struggle which will only be postponed through the expectation of the enemy that a more convenient opportunity may present itself. Sooner or later war is certain. The exact moment will be decided by the enemy when all his arrangements are completed. All that can be done on our side is to wait and watch, and quietly make every preparation for the worst, so that when the squall bursts upon us there shall be no danger of being thrown on our beam ends."

THE BURMA BLUE BOOK.

BEFORE the change which has, owing to Thebaw's misrule and contumacy, taken place in the government of Burma be allowed to pass into the domain of "ancient history," it may be well to devote a few lines to the manner of its origin, as recorded in a Blue Book just issued, and the last document in which is the Proclamation in which, "By command of the Queen Empress," the annexation of the kingdom was notified by Lord Dufferin on January 1. That a volume of correspondence, numbering 266 pages, should, within less than three weeks from that date, be in the hands of the public, is a fact creditable to its official compilers, as well as to the Government, who have shown their earnest desire to furnish the fullest information with the least possible delay.

The story opens so far back as July, 1878, when the first indication of the wish of the Burmese Government to enter into closer relations with France was manifested by the deputation to Paris of an Envoy, whose proceedings were of a somewhat mysterious nature, but of whose diplomatic character the French Ministers professed entire ignorance; and it was considered desirable to remind them that "considering the geographical situation of Burma, and its political relations with British India, Her Majesty's Government would object to any special alliance or understanding between the Burmese and any other Power," and in particular to facilities being afforded for the purchase of arms. The French Government showed every wish to meet the wishes of Lord Derby, who was then Foreign Secretary, and the question was for the time dropped.

It was, however, not long before closer attention to Burmese matters was forced on us by the approaching death of the King; and Lord Lytton, then Viceroy, showed his prescience by endeavouring to provide against possible future difficulties. The whole system on which our relations with Mandalay were based should, he thought, undergo a change, and this change was to be pointedly mentioned as a quasi-condition of "the general recognition and support" of his successor.

Again, "we have empowered Mr. Shaw to use any opportunity of intimating at Mandalay that the friendly understanding which we are ready to establish with the present King must depend on a proper recognition by his Majesty of the position and influence of the British Resident." (p. 3.)

The Home Government, however, while approving what action the necessity of the case might seem to require, hardly thought the moment (p. 23) opportune for the entire revision of our treaties with Burma, an opinion which was, unfortunately, adhered to far too long.

Thebaw had no special claim to the throne, and his being placed on it was the result of a palace intrigue, to further which all his probable rivals were invited to Mandalay, and there secured, a few only escaping to the British Residency. Whether or not Thebaw, or his half-sister and wife Soopayalat (a name signifying "the most lovely of princesses"), was nettled at this escape, and at our presumed intervention in the matter, does not appear, but that some communication took place between our Agent and the prisoners is (p. 29) clear, and that this may have been one of the causes of the inveterate hatred entertained towards us at Mandalay there seems every reason to suppose. Be this as it may, no long time elapsed ere the then Resident, Mr. Shaw, had to report (pp. 92, 100, and elsewhere) outrages on British subjects. The Queen, and the all-powerful Tynedah Mengyee, saw the hateful British influence everywhere; and, probably enough, to us was ascribed, by the latter, that attempt—an attempt which the Resident evidently discredited—to obtain the release of the prisoners, which led to the massacre, at intervals, of themselves and their relatives, to the number in all of about 150, a monstrosity which called forth general execration.

The pleasures of being a member of the Royal family of Burma are, it will have been seen, "tempered by assassination," and the amenities of what has facetiously been called Burmese criminal jurisprudence are varied. To be put to death "with every refinement of torture," if a girl's pretty face excited the susceptibilities of the King, and the jealousy of Soopayalat, to have (if a Minister) one's mouth filled with gunpowder and one's head blown off, seem to have been pleasant variations from the more ordinary courses of flogging to death, or of crucifying and disembowelling. One form of punishing a poor girl who, with her brother, was accused of transmitting presents to a fugitive Prince, is thus given (p. 55):—

The girl was murdered in the ordinary Burmese fashion. Her hands were bound between her knees, two cords were fastened round her neck, by means of which a man on either side forced back her head. While in this position another man struck her across the throat with a heavy bamboo. The girl was young and strong, and, they say, she endured seven blows before she died.

The barbarity, as well as the fact, of these murders (euphemistically called "clearing," while imprisonment is concealed under the phrase "keeping by") necessitated repeated remonstrances and threats to discontinue further intercourse with so brutal a ruler. But these, like the massing on the frontier of troops (subsequently withdrawn), had no effect, and, from October, 1879, to June, 1884, the Burmese Government were, except as to matters commercial, left to "stew in their own gravy" so far as India was concerned; though, meanwhile, negotiations had been carried on in Paris, which, notwithstanding the usual official denials, ultimately ended in the Treaty of 1885.

Meanwhile the Burmese, emboldened by that helpless forbearance which every Oriental nation mistakes for cowardice, had threatened the frontier of Munnipoor, and had

"Insult on insult heaped, and wrong on wrong,"

on British subjects. Lord Ripon found it conducive to his comfort to regard these things as quieta, and quieta non movere, except to gain a hollow and ephemeral popularity by toadying to the Natives, was his notion of statesmanship. It was not, therefore, until the question came prominently before Lord Dufferin that there was any chance of its being adequately handled. And then it was the growing influence of France which went far to turn the scale. To quote a good summary in a Times' leading article, the present Viceroy—

Fully admitting the numerous grievances and indignities for which all redress was denied, yet adhered to the policy of his predecessors so far as to hold that substantial British interests had after all fared, perhaps, as well as can be expected when such a Government as that of Burma is in question. But he added that a very great and important change in the whole situation was being effected by the persistent endeavours of France to obtain a footing at Mandalay, which would give her extensive powers of interference with British commerce, and would lead to political complications of the most perilous kind. A treaty was in fact concluded between France and Burma, and although successive French Foreign Ministers gave positive assurances that no exclusive commercial concessions were being sought, it is altogether beyond question that such things were being negotiated for by French speculators, powerfully assisted by the Resident whom the French Government, more fortunate than our own, had established at Mandalay. Had a French bank, a French railway, and a French shipping company been established on the Upper Irrawaddy—and detailed schemes are given in the Blue Book—the French treaty with Burma would speedily have become a document of importance, and would have been used for the powerful discouragement and compression of British trade.

What has followed since, when the full bearing of the secret negotiations of the French was discovered, is in the memory of all. The failure, regarded as probable, of the Burmese to attend to our remonstrances against concessions to foreigners, was regarded, even by Mr. Bernard, in a light the most serious. "I admit" (says he, p. 168) "that refusal of Ava to comply with our request involves us in annexation."

The Burmese refusal once received, and the resolution to enforce our demands once taken, nothing could have been more prudently, and, to the people, mercifully, decisive than the orders given to General Prendergast: "After you cross the frontier, no offer of submission can be accepted, or can affect the movement of the troops. Mandalay must be occupied, and Thebaw dethroned. You should announce this definitely to the Burmese authorities and population."

The work has been well and quickly done. The Viceroy, in restored health, is to be at Rangoon by the end of the present month; and, though his proposals for the future administration of the newly-acquired territory will probably not be made public until they have been under the consideration of the Home Government, it may safely be anticipated that they will be such as to ensure tranquillity and prosperity, and will satisfy all but the immediate hangers-on of Thebaw.

THE story is told by a New York paper of an English officer of the Indian Army who recently "joined the majority." When he commanded a crack rifle corps an inspection took place, which passed off satisfactorily. There were no complaints, and the regiment was evidently in good order. "But," said the inspecting general, "I am bound to tell you, colonel, that rumours have reached me of gambling being carried on extensively amongst your officers." "That may have been the case, sir," said the colonel, "some months ago; but I can assure you there is nothing of the kind in vogue now—I've won all the ready money in the regiment, and I would not allow any gambling on credit."

India in Parliament.

In the Queen's Speech, read on Thursday on the occasion of the opening of the new Parliament by Her Majesty in person, the following allusion was made to the Burmese Expedition:—

"Greatly to my regret, I was compelled in the month of November to declare war against Thebaw, the King of Ava. Acts of hostility on his part against my subjects and the interests of my Empire had, since his accession, been deliberate and continuous. These had necessitated the withdrawal of my Representatives from his Court; and my demands for redress were systematically evaded and disregarded. An attempt to confiscate the property of my subjects trading under agreement in his dominions, and a refusal to settle the dispute by arbitration, convinced me that the protection of British life and property, and the cessation of dangerous anarchy in Upper Burma, could only be effected by force of arms. The gallantry of my European and Indian forces, under Lieutenant-General Sir Harry Prendergast, rapidly brought the country under my power, and I have decided that the most certain method of insuring peace and order in those regions is to be found in the permanent incorporation of the kingdom of Ava with my Empire. Papers on this subject will be immediately laid before you."

The promised inquiry into Indian affairs also figured as follows in the Speech:—

"The time which has elapsed since I assumed the direct government of India makes it desirable that the operation of the Statutes by which that change was effected should be carefully investigated. I commend this important matter to your earnest attention."

MONDAY, JAN. 25.

Mr. HUNTER, a new member, objected to the Burma Expedition on the ground that the Act of 1858 prohibited the employment, out of India, of H.M.'s troops without the previous sanction of Parliament.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL vindicated the course taken, the discussion of which, Mr. Gladstone observed, had better be taken when the Indian Secretary came to move the statutory resolution sanctioning the expenditure out of the Indian revenues.

Lord R. CHURCHILL remarked that Mr. Hunter could not have sufficiently studied the Burma Blue Book, and endorsed the Attorney-General's interpretation of the Government of India Act, which, he contended, had not been violated. He denied that the course taken by the Government deprived the House of Commons of all control over the employment of Indian troops. Even now it was within the power of the House, if it thought fit, to replace King Thebaw on the throne of Burma. At the same time he pointed out that it had always been customary to seek the sanction of Parliament for the employment of Indian troops out of India after such employment had been determined upon and the initial expense incurred, and he denied that it was essential to apply for such sanction before the troops were employed. For this he quoted the case of the Chinese War in 1859, when the expenditure for the employment of Indian troops was commenced five months before the sanction of Parliament was asked for, the Abyssinian War in 1867, the Afghan War in 1878, the employment of Indian troops in the first Egyptian War, and the Suakim Expedition of last year, when orders were sent to India to send troops, and an expenditure of £350,000 incurred a month before the sanction of Parliament was asked for.

Mr. HUNTER then withdrew his amendment.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—There is likely soon to be a rush to the Hukong valley in search of gold, which nowadays is much more useful than silver, when thousands of Europeans can obtain only eighteen pennies for a rupee. The existence of gold has been known for generations past, but plundering mountain tribes and the oppression of Thebaw's Burmese Government have hindered speculators who wanted to dig.

The Hukong valley now belongs to the British Government, and the easiest way to it is by Sibsagar, in Upper Assam. How long will it take for our slow India Office to commence the construction of a Roman road through tea gardens to gold mines?

In 1836—fifty years ago—Captain Hannay wrote as follows:—"Gold is found in most of the rivers, both in grains and in pieces, the size of a large pea. The rivers which produce it in greatest quantity and of the best quality are the Kapdip and the Namkwun. The sand of the former is not worked for this mineral, I am told, but large pits are dug on its banks, where the gold is found as above mentioned." (Page 103 of "Selections of Papers by Bengal Secretariat, 1873.")

Besides gold we may soon hope to have finest Hukong tea quoted in the markets, and large supplies of coal and petroleum will, I hope, soon reward the enterprise of Englishmen.—Your obedient servant,

T.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1875, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pure and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by day-light, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS,
 ASTHMA,
 BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is a necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & CO., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Bank, Jan. 5, 1885.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.9.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBSTITUTED IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1/4d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.9.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the 15th January; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad to the 13th January; from Rangoon to the 8th January.

THE news of the defeat of Lord Salisbury's Government on the Address by a Gladstone-Parnellite coalition, and their consequent resignation, together with the later intelligence that Mr. Gladstone had been summoned by Her Majesty, have been received in India with feelings of something like dismay by the majority of Anglo-Indians; the Native papers are, as a rule, pretty certain to be jubilant. That we shall resume our former position of isolation in Europe, and that fresh difficulties in Central Asia, and possibly in Persia, will be raised by Russia, can hardly, we fear, fail to be the result of the change.

The Times correspondent, telegraphing on the 31st January, from Mandalay, says:—

The Viceroy will arrive in Rangoon on the 6th of February, and leave on the 8th for Mandalay, which will be reached on the 12th. He will remain in Mandalay until the 17th, when he will return, arriving at Rangoon on the 20th, and sailing for Calcutta on the 24th. Mr. Bernard will accompany the Viceroy.

A strong column, with two guns, was despatched to-day from Mandalay to the lower Chindwin district, which will be permanently occupied.

It has been decided to immediately erect barracks for troops at Mandalay, Bhama, Menbo, and Myingyan, and also in the lower Chindwin district. Temporary barracks will also be constructed at four other stations.

The survey and detailed estimates for the railway from Toungoo to Myingyan will be completed before the rains.

An attack was made on the 29th inst. by a body of dacoits on the station at Paroatoa, forty miles to the westward of the Salween river, near the Siamese frontier. The raiders were sharply repulsed by the Goorkha and Karen police. The Red Karens have volunteered to assist in defending the frontier against the raiders. Mr. Bernard is raising a body of these hardy mountaineers as an armed militia, to be called out on an emergency, and in ordinary times to come out periodically.

All the nationalities in Rangoon are urging on their preparations to welcome the Viceroy; and the Burmese are taking a very active part in completing the arrangements for his reception.

From Calcutta we learn, under the same date, that—

The Viceroy's approaching visit to Mandalay excites much interest in India as well as in Burma, and it is hoped that it will result in the formulating of a definite scheme of administration. The fullest confidence is felt that Lord Dufferin will deal with this subject, as well as with the all-important question of our relations with China, in a masterly way; and it will be a matter for the gravest regret if the change of Ministry has the effect of embarrassing him or of not leaving him a free hand. It is absolutely necessary that we should have a strong, independent administration in Upper Burma, and that the administration should be established on a bold, broad basis, by selecting the best men, as was done in the Punjab, and not allowing the claims of the Civil Service to override all other considerations.

The construction of roads should be taken in hand, the Mandalay Railway should be pushed on, armed launches, with police patrols, should be put at the disposal of the district officers, and the Shans would be won over—a difficult task now and one which should have been accomplished long ago.

Thus, and not by setting up a highly-organised administration like those of the older Provinces, will Burma be most speedily made as peaceful and prosperous as any portion of the Indian Empire.

REUTER hears from Rangoon, Jan. 30th:—

Intelligence from Mandalay reports that the suburbs of the city are now quieter.

WE have received from the India Office the following:—

"From Viceroy, February 1st, 1886.

"Lieutenant Armstrong, 2nd Battalion Hampshire Regiment, died of wounds on the 29th of January at Mandalay."

THE Income Tax Bill was passed, as arranged, on Friday, all amendments tending to limit its scope being rejected. At a meeting of the Calcutta Trades' Association, it was resolved to acquiesce in the inevitable.

THE first general meeting of the supporters of Lady Dufferin's fund was held in Calcutta on Wednesday, the Viceroy presiding. A large number of the leading citizens, as well as delegates from several of the provincial branches, attended. Lord Dufferin said that he had never taken part in any public proceedings with greater pleasure, and described the meeting as perhaps the most important ever held in India. He alluded to the great interest taken in the matter by the Queen, and expressed his satisfaction at the success which had attended the movement. Mr. Ilbert presented the report of the central committee, showing that the total receipts were Rs. 1,48,334. Various speakers followed, all giving gratifying testimony to the success of the fund.

THE Viceroy has delayed his departure for Burma to enable him to receive in Calcutta the foreign officers sent to the recent camp at Delhi. During his absence Mr. Ilbert will act as President of the Council. On his return from Burma the Viceroy will probably remain in Calcutta till the Government leaves for Simla, about the end of March; while Sir Frederick Roberts, after a few days' stay, will proceed on a tour of inspection along the North-Western frontier.

WITH advertence to Khorassan, above referred to, the following is significant, for we all know what Russian scientific explanations mean. In the Times of Feb. 1st we read:—

To-morrow an exploring expedition is to start from Tiflis, with the object of thoroughly investigating the natural history of Khorassan. It will be under the direction of Dr. Radde, who will take special charge of the botanical department and of the zoology of the higher animals. Dr. Walter, who was lately assistant to Professor Haeckel at Jena, will have charge of the lower animals. M. Kontjin will be the geologist, and two general assistants will complete the scientific portion of the expedition. It is hoped that their work will be finished by the end of August. A number of specialists will be charged with the task of examining and describing the collections with a view to publication; and it has been already arranged that Dr. Boettger, of Frankfurt, will deal with the mollusca, M. Strauch, of St. Petersburg, with the reptiles and amphibia, and Dr. Radde with the birds. It is understood that the Emperor has expressed a strong personal interest in the expedition.

WE (Home News) are happy to state that the scheme, announced in our last issue, for erecting a memorial to the late Sir Arthur Phayre, is now assuming a satisfactory shape. A committee has been appointed, consisting of the following noblemen and gentlemen:—Lord Napier of Magdala (Chairman), the Hon. Sir Ashley Eden, Mr. C. E. Bernard, General H. W. Blake, Mr. R. Stewart (Gladstone, Wyllie and Co.), Mr. W. S. Steel, Sir J. Fayrer, Rev. H. W. Crofton, Mr. E. Garnet Man, General H. Nelson Davies, Colonel Grattan, Mr. Clifford Lloyd, General H. T. Duncan, and General Barnett Ford. Subscriptions will be received by the Secretary, General Barnett Ford, 31, Queensborough-terrace, W.; or by the bankers, Messrs. Grindlay and Co., 55, Parliament-street, London; or their correspondents, Messrs. Grindlay and Co., Calcutta; Messrs. Grindlay, Groom and Co., Bombay; and Messrs. Binny and Co., Madras.

THE health of the troops stationed at Quetta and the neighbourhood is improving. This is satisfactory, as most of the corps stationed there have suffered severely. The railway is progressing, but no steps will probably be taken to commence the entrenched camp until March. We trust that both these works will be pushed forward with the utmost speed.

FROM Merv it is reported that the Transcaspien Railway is being laid down with unexampled rapidity. The locomotive already runs twenty-five versts beyond Askabad, and the first train is expected at Merv in the early part of next April. Great activity in building and accomplishing general improvements is perceptible at Merv, six new streets after the European fashion being already completed. At the fortress of Koshut Khan Kali, another Russian town is being formed, beginning with some large buildings to be used as railway offices.

We wish we could see anything like corresponding progress made with our own Quetta Railway to that which the indefatigable General Annenkoff has brought about on the Transcaspian line!

A CONTEMPORARY says:—

Boring for petroleum in the Bolan may now be considered as past the experimental stage. The Canadian experts engaged, who have hitherto been cautious in expressing their opinion, are now confident that sufficient oil can be raised, not only to supply fuel for the railways near, but also for the lighting of all Northern India. Some of the engines of the Pishin Railway are being altered so as to burn petroleum instead of wood; and the new fuel will, no doubt, in time be universal on that and the present Indus Valley line.

OUR Native friends somewhat exaggerate the practical results likely to ensue from the late "Bombay National Congress," as they pompously style it. It is, however, not likely to do harm, and, if a really competent President can always, as seems to have been the case on the present occasion, be secured, such a Conference, held from time to time, may give rise to valuable suggestions. On this subject the Bombay Sama char has the following:—

We think this was the first time, in the history of India, that the accepted leaders of Native opinion met on a common platform to discuss political questions affecting this country. We think Bombay is regaining her good name in connection with political advancement. The proceedings of the Congress distinctly make certain demands, which of course cannot be, and will not be, complied with at once at first, but in time we shall see that the advantages to the country from the united action of the representatives will be lasting and substantial. Some writers attempt to cast ridicule on the proceedings of the Congress, but they may just as well try to stop the flow of a stream, for what is inevitable must happen. To exactly know what the Native population thinks and feels on a certain question is advantageous to both the ruler and the ruled.

MR. ILBERT'S late speech as Vice-Chancellor in the "Convocation" of the Calcutta University has given much pleasure to the Native and pro-Native papers. The announcement made by him certainly indicates a move in the right direction. The Liberal thus refers to it:—

The Government of India has determined to found six scholarships, two in each presidency, to enable young Indians to proceed to England and prosecute their studies in Oxford or Cambridge. The scholarships will be tenable for three years, and will be awarded after a competitive examination to be held under the auspices of the universities. We must speak in very high terms of this graceful action on the part of Government. In the year 1870 similar scholarships were announced by Lord Lawrence, but, owing to the narrow-minded policy of the then Secretary of State, the Duke of Argyll, the proposal was not sanctioned. It has taken fifteen years to convince the rulers of the wisdom of that step—so slowly does Anglo-Indian opinion run in the direction of progress. We hope, now that the concession has been made, that the Government will not proceed in its usual half-hearted manner, but give the privilege fairly and ungrudgingly. No nomination, no favouritism, but open competition on suitable terms should be invited.

We read in the Darjeeling News that:—

One of the refugees from Khatmando arrived there not long ago. He is a son of the late Jung Bahadoor, thoroughly knocked up after twenty-six days' trouble across country, and has accordingly but little to say for himself at present. He states he just managed to escape from the palace massacre. This refugee is a son of the late Sir Jung Bahadoor, and was a general in the Nepaulese army. It is evident that the faction of the late Jung Bahadoor is practically overpowered.

A COLOMBO banker writes to a Ceylon paper:—

It may be all very well for you to cry out that we are in no need of fortifications for Colombo, but how would the banks fare if the port were visited by a foreign man-of-war, and a requisition made on each bank house for all the silver in the vaults? Suppose the town is completely undefended and a cruiser of a nation with which we were at war comes off the port and summons us to permit her to coal, and to take away whatever specie there is in the treasury and the bank vaults? What reply should we make? . . . To leave the capital of so important a colony completely undefended is simply courting disaster. In this we cordially agree.

THE Delhi Gazette has the following:—

A Rangoon telegram states that the Chinese, in addition to thoroughly patrolling their own side of the frontier, have offered the British authorities in Burma the services of a thousand men in case of disturbances.

The Maharatta gives us the most sensible remarks on the annexation of Burma which we have seen in any Native journal. As to the separation of Burma, as a Crown colony, from India we have already expressed our opinion. It would have been the height of unwisdom to render it necessary for the Government of India to refer to the India Office, and the Colonial Governor to that nest of circumlocution, the Colonial Office, every point arising between persons in two conterminous jurisdictions; and the objections previously existing acquire redoubled force now that the Indian Viceroy is "next door neighbour" to China. The Maharatta says:—

In the absence of any information as to the particular reasons which induced the Viceroy and the advisers of Her Imperial Majesty to pronounce in favour of annexation, we have not the means to judge of the soundness of the decision. Apart from all others, one reason, which outweighs all other considerations, may have prevailed; and it is that Burma, directly under British rule, may make a better field for British enterprise, British trade, and British administrative genius than the same as a protectorate or as an independent State in alliance. There are others who think that, afraid of a Russian invasion of India by sea through the Pacific Ocean, England wanted to hold the keys of the Eastern shores of India into her hands, and this she has succeeded in doing by annexing Burma. Either reason may be sound or unsound according as it is examined from an English or an Indian point of view. We have only to suggest that whatever the reason of annexation let the Burman Empire be kept distinctly apart from the Indian Empire and let it be made a British colony.

HERE are two very different opinions as to the tours of Government officials. It is a question whether the expense of these official tours is not susceptible of much diminution:—

Government officials, from the Governor-General down to the Assistant Collector, all go out annually on tour of inspection. They necessarily take with them their karkoons, sepoy, and the whole office paraphernalia. They again receive from Government batta money for any additional expenditure that may be incurred during their travels. But these tours are a source of great trouble and anxiety to the inhabitants of the districts visited. Formerly great care was taken to prevent the sherestadars from anyhow annoying the people; but now the tours appear to have dwindled down into mere trips for amusement, shikar, or change of air. The officer now does not pay any attention to what happens behind his back. Wherever the sowaree happens to go it means serious hardship to the potter, barber, carpenter, husbandman, Bania, dhed, or chamar. No doubt the principal officials are ignorant of this, but there must be some reason for so much discontent. The koonbie is taken away to duty, with his cart and bullocks, regardless of sickness in his house or the state of his fields. The potter is made to carry water in the same way. The Bania, again, must come in for his share in connection with grain-supply. We assure the Government that the Banias lose invariably in these transactions, and consequently they have adopted the system of raising a subscription amongst themselves, the amount of which is paid to any one of their body who undertakes to supply grain, &c., during an unexpected sowaree.—Hittechu (Ahmedabad.)

It would not be an exaggeration to state that no error is more common amongst the ordinary run of the Natives of India than the belief that the so-called tours of inspection of high officials, civil and military, are nothing better than mere idle pageants performed or pleasure-trips undertaken for the personal gratification of the officers concerned, at heavy and unnecessary expense to the Government. The belief thus cherished becomes the parent of idle fancies, prejudicial to the growth of the feeling of confidence and esteem on the part of the people for their rulers, the manifestation of which the latter can justly claim from the former, and which would be accorded to them by all reasonable Natives understanding the real nature and uses of official tours of inspection. For the dissemination of such understanding the publication of summary accounts of the useful work done by the leading civil and military officers in the country in the course of tours of inspection undertaken by them from time to time, we consider to be of great public service.—Bombay Chronicle.

ON the vexed subject of limitations, by caste of marriage, we read in the Indian Spectator as to one such union :—

Mr. Shripad Babajee Thakur, the civilian, has set an example to his community by marrying "out of caste," that is by accepting a bride not exactly of his own caste. Or, it may be, that the credit is due to the bride and her family of accepting a stranger. Hindoo castes are so minutely divided that some of the sub-divisions consist only of a few families. We know of several castes which are practically of the same stock, have the same habits and customs, have considerable intercourse otherwise even up to dining; but who still refuse to intermarry, simply because one set of families lives at Bombay, and the other at Ahmedabad, or because one set sticks to trade, while the other takes kindly to the learned professions or to Government service. Could anything be more frivolous, more unpatriotic, more destructive of national growth? And apart from higher considerations, what are the immediate effects of this exclusiveness? Some of the castes have no eligible brides, others no eligible bridegrooms. The result may be conceived, especially as widow marriage is impossible to the wretched people. The selling of brides is often inevitable. Government can do nothing in such a matter.

We read in the Englishman that shortly after the last cyclone suddenly burst over Madras, the local Government wrote to the Government of India, suggesting that telegraphic communication should be established between Madras and either Sumatra or the Nicobars, for the despatch of storm warnings. The Government of India, however, considers that the value of meteorological stations in these localities in relation to the storm signal service on the Madras coast is by no means established. Experience has shown that the storms which reach Madras are in most cases formed on the east or the north-east coast of Ceylon, and that therefore telegrams from the opposite side of the Bay would give little or no help in forecasting the approach of storms. The Government of India therefore suggests that telegraphic reports from Pondicherry and Negapatam, as well as from Jafna and Trincomallee in Ceylon, would be more likely to give the required information.

FROM the useful report on the Rice trade of 1885 by Messrs. Fraser, of 40, Mincing-lane, we learn that while the shipments to Europe of rice from Burma show an increase of 69,700 tons, or more than ten per cent. on the shipments (605,700 tons) of last year, the Bengal rice shipments have not increased, while from Madras there have, for the first time since 1878, been no shipments to Europe whatever.

IN the Circular, dated 28th January, of Messrs. W. J. and H. Thomson, of 38, Mincing-lane, it is stated that :—

There has not been any alteration in the general state of the markets, which are well supplied, with speculation almost dormant, and the political events of the week have further unsettled trade. Prices show slight alteration since the last mail. Fine descriptions of the new crop still realise extreme prices. No change has transpired in Brazil or other foreign coffee. The supplies of tea by auction have not been quite so large as in the previous week, with prices about the same. By private contract some inquiry prevails for fair to medium grades of Congou. At the public sales of Indian there has been more competition at steady rates.

Chit Chat.

"Tis lawful to be taught by an enemy." Thus in an English form runs the well-known adage of schoolboy days. The application is universal. On this occasion the scene is in Afghanistan, where side by side are pitched the Russian and English camps; but mark the distinction :—"One great difference in the size and life of the Russian camp," so proclaims a writer in the Pioneer, "is the almost entire absence of followers. Our camp with our Indian and Persian servants, even at our present reduced scale, still presents a scene full of life and animation in comparison to the Russian camp, where twenty-five Russian infantry men seem to do the servants' work for the whole party. They pitch and unpitch the kibitkas, and load them on the camels far better than the Turkomans themselves; indeed, as a matter of fact, the latter are quite useless at such work, as with them the women do all the pitching of their kibitkas, and the men are accustomed to look on with lofty contempt at such work." It may be hoped this paragraph will meet the eye of the illustrious soldier who is at the head of the army in India.

THE "Camp of Exercise" in the East has been enlivened with a somewhat unexpected incident in the shape of an attack upon the bystanders by an infuriated elephant, who broke loose and trampled under foot all and everything that he could find; fortunately, though one man was injured, no serious harm was done, and in the end the huge monster was recaptured and trotted back to his appointed station.

THE loss of the Indus means, alas! the loss of forty-three boxes containing the papers of the well-known archaeologist, General Alexander Cunningham. Money cannot unfortunately replace the precious documents, and the world is poorer by the wreck of the ill-fated steamer.

MR. STUART CUMBERLAND, the thought-reader, has been unfortunate. When at Poona he had a éance at five rupees (10s.) a head, whereas at the same time an amateur in a similar line of business was performing several of his professional rival's feats free of charge in the drawing-room of the Napier Hotel. We should like to have read Mr. Cumberland's "thoughts."

We had occasion in these columns some weeks ago to express in no very complimentary terms our views as to that champion of the oppressed—"Digby, C.I.E." We read, therefore, in the Times of India a very refreshing paragraph alluding to Mr. Bright's peculiar notions about India :—"Not one of the individuals who share his 'fads' and 'toady' to his ignorance has been elected, and instead of such of Mr. Bright's disciples as Mr. Seymour Keag, Mr. William Digby, and Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose, and the rest of the nominees of the so-called Indian delegates, we have a sturdy phalanx of experienced Anglo-Indian administrators." This is encouraging.

MRS. GRANT DUFF has come to the rescue and spoken words of wisdom to her fellow-sisters :—"Idle, purposeless chatter, useless, ugly fancy work, and incessant reading of works of fiction, are the ways in which girls of your age, and possibly women of any age, are more tempted to waste their time." The words were addressed to some Madras female students, but are they not applicable to the sex at large?

THERE has been great rejoicing at Baroda consequent on the marriage festivities of the Gaekwar, and the populace has been regaled with an exhibition of sports in the arena. First of all came athlete, tumblers, and trained parrots, but the great attraction was the fights between various animals. The "sport" commenced with a rush of two buffaloes, one of whom was stunned in the encounter, and the other probably had a headache for the rest of its life. Then some rams had a fight, after which two elephants were brought in, but the huge monsters refused to splinter their tusks to please the crowd; but after a while, enraged by squibs and other irritants, the good-tempered beasts were spurred on to an encounter, and the earth shook with the shocks of their charges; but the pièce de résistance was when a well mounted horseman went a few feet before an infuriated elephant, and slipped dexterously aside as the latter tried to run his tusks into the daring rider, when at last the horse received a gash which covered itself and its rider with gore: then, and not till then, were the spectators roused to a frenzy of excitement. Such are the pleasures in the East of the year of grace 1886, and yet some benighted z-alots would have it believed that India for the Indians is the key-note of successful statesmanship.

"THE result," says the Pioneer, "of the reign of 'baboo' has been that the Government of India, the Government of Bengal, the entire European community, and a formidable body of Natives are united in a common crusade against municipal mismanagement in the city (Calcutta), while in the suburbs the recent report of the Sanitary Commissioner records a state of things so absolutely appalling that it is certain that heroic measures will have forthwith to be adopted to arrest the inevitable consequences of so gross and monstrous a violation of the laws of decency and health." Precisely, this is just what might have been expected. "India for the Indians" is a capital electioneering cry in this country where ignorant clap-trap generally for a time commands success, but it would be none the less ruin to the fair domains which are under the beneficent sway of the Empress of India. It could be hoped that this paragraph would meet the eye of at least one prominent politician who has been much addicted to lauding to the skies the Indian delegates, et hoc genus omne.

To catch one elephant every week in the year must cause the sport to pale somewhat; but then Mr. G. P. Sanderson, the great "shikari" of these huge beasts, is a Government officer, who entraps them for duty, not for pleasure. But will the supply of elephants never come to an end?

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

Precedence in this number is accorded to a very thoughtful article by Sir James Stephen on "The Laws relating to Land." The gist of the article is, perhaps, best summed up in the learned writer's own words at p. 730:—"There is nothing special about land considered as a subject of property. The principles of political economy apply to it in exactly the same way, with exactly the same limitations, as to movable property. Simple and obvious as this principle appears, it is continually forgotten and overlooked, and sometimes denied. . . . The existing law was founded on the notion that land was the principal subject of property, and was greatly influenced by the principle that political power should accompany property in land. On the other hand, extreme Radicalism regards land as property subject to exceptional principles, and to be dealt with in an exceptional way." The application of the principle above indicated is most carefully elaborated, and the effects of its enunciation by a legislative enactment (a rough draft of which is given at p. 734) investigated. Further than by directing attention to its salient points, it would be presumption in us to comment on any essay by a writer so exceptionally conversant with his subject as Sir J. Stephen.

Another article, by the Rev. C. C. Grant, deals with "The Land Question in the Highlands," where the power of the landlord has always been very great, and where the agitation in favour of "land for the many" is as factitious as the claims of the crofters to any proprietary rights in the soil are fabulous. "In no authoritative document, in no plea laid before any court, in no charter," says Mr. Grant, "do we find the proprietary rights of the peasants crop up. . . . A crofter," he continues, "in far-off days, who could raise up his finger against his chief, or say to him, 'This land is as much mine as yours, you only hold it in trust for me,' would be as wonderful a spectacle as ever Gulliver saw in his travels." Mr. Chamberlain's assertions are, it is distinctly proved, the outcome of gross and discreditable ignorance, it may be hoped, if nothing worse.

Another kind of "property," that in Church patronage, is effectively dealt with by the Bishop of Peterborough, who reproduces, with annotations, his own eloquent speech on the subject, delivered more than a decade since in the House of Lords. Rejecting—and supporting his rejection by vigorous passages quoted from the writings of a dissenting minister of ability, Mr. J. Angell James (p. 821)—the dissenting panacea, the "popular election of ministers," which the Bishop considers "the very worst of all possible modes of appointing them," he expresses a wish now, as in his speech in the Lords, "instead of inventing new schemes of patronage, to fall back on the old. I would," he adds, "revert to the original idea of Church patronage as that of a trust involving certain rights of property." "In the matter of patronage, property (the italics are his lordship's) is the incident (p. 814), of a trust, and not trust the incident of a property." "The wilder and cruder changes," urged on us by amateur reformers as panaceas against disestablishment have, to the Bishop, "the air of attempts to save the Establishment at the cost of the Church,"—propter vitam vivendi perdere causas. The proposal to transfer patronage to Patronage Boards (to which, the Bishop says, he would gladly hand over his own), has received very general approval, but has not yet been adequately discussed; and this article, which, in the present state of the "State-Church Question," is of the highest importance, may be expected to bring it more prominently before the public.

The very serious inquiry entered on by Canon Gregory, in his article on "Crime and Education," whether the schoolmaster has even begun to effect a diminution of criminal offences, meets, as might have been anticipated, with a negative reply; the optimistic results justified by official manipulation of figures being exploded by a careful examination of the returns for 1870 and 1884. In 1870 389,712, in 1884 583,330 persons were summarily convicted, an increase out of all proportion to the growth of the population, and one which took place in face of an augmentation of the police by more than 8,000 men. The increase, in the same period, of suicides by fully 30 per cent., and the greater frequency of "crimes of violence, marking barbarity and unrestrained passion," are discouraging symptoms. Crimes such as the ill-treatment of women and children will never be put down, until the ruffians who commit them are, by the liberal use of the lash, made to feel a part at least of the pain they inflict. One terrible revelation we must not pass over—it is the increasing use among mere children of blasphemous and obscene language.

"This scandal," wrote, not long ago, a gentleman, calling himself an old journalist in every sense of the word, "of obscene language in the streets from school children is becoming, I can assure you, in the suburbs of London, a very serious thing. It may be asked, however, what has the London School Board to do with the matter? I will not answer this inquiry by reference to the pain and trouble of these decent women who find their children are driven into Board Schools, learn there the filthiest words, and worse, but I will ask any one of your readers who lives near a Board School in a rough district, to station himself at the doors at the time the boys and girls are dismissed at mid-day. He will hear language never uttered in the worst rows of the vilest wretches of bygone days."

The Colonies figure in an article by Mr. Finch-Hatton on the expediency of separating North from South Queensland; and poetry in an "appreciative" notice by Mr. Courthope of Lord Lytton's "Glenaveril." Nor is Art neglected. Pictorial art is represented by an unduly partial critique of Millais, who is extolled as having surpassed all his predecessors in depicting the play of the human features—a remark which leads us to ask if Mr. Armstrong has ever seen the better examples of Murillo; while the Stage receives its tribute in Mr. Pollock's remarks on Mr. Irving's reproduction of Faust. The number is one of the most important which we have seen. The Essays by the Judge, the Bishop, and the Canon would alone suffice to make it an exceptionally good one.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.*

It is not probable that Bacon's curious New Atlantis is aught but "caviare to the general"; but perhaps the "real old original" legend of the Mysterious Continent—or, since Mr. Hyde Clarke will have it so, of the King of the Mysterious Continent—called Atlantis, is even less known. Mr. Hyde Clarke, whose attainments and whose research are known to every one who takes an interest in the subjects with which the Royal Historical Society deals, has given us, in this number of the Society's Transactions, a careful dissertation on this subject, drawing his facts from sources too various to enumerate, and marshalling his deductions in a manner the most cogent. The writer's linguistic acquirements have enabled him to trace similitudes, which cannot fail to strike the most casual reader, between names, words, customs, and, to a certain extent, of alphabetical characters, in many parts of the old, and of the new, worlds. He traces the original idea which led to the daring enterprise of Columbus to the writings of Classical authors, and thinks it possible that the great Discoverer's theory was founded on "the tradition that the two continents were separated at the Equator, and that he would find an open channel to Cathay." We are disposed to agree with the Essayist as to the entire absence of satisfactory evidence of the submergence of an Atlantic continent, or of an island of such magnitude as to be taken for one. But volcanic action produces (as Mr. Hyde Clarke himself observes at p. 16) upheaval as well as submergence, and it has been more than once suggested that the isthmus of Panama may actually, in (to use the writer's phrase) protohistoric times, have offered a real "Panama canal" passage to Cathay, subsequently blocked by upheaval of the ridge now forming the Panama Isthmus.

It is, by the way, not a little interesting to find here another instance of the tendency of the Greeks to change Native names into the corresponding meanings in their own language, on which we had occasion to remark in a recent notice of Mr. McCrindle's able work on Ptolemy's Geography of Asia. "Critias," we read (p. 24), "says expressly that Solon turned the Native names of the Atlantis into their Greek meanings."

We think that Mr. Solly Flood has, in the next paper, succeeded in procuring for Henry of Monmouth a fair acquittal for the offence traditionally laid to his charge of striking in open court Chief Justice Gascoign, though it cost the writer more than 100 pages to achieve this result. But he has in doing so assuredly been guilty of l'ère courtoisie envers les dames. Twice in his Essay does he accuse Miss Strickland of "grossly" misrepresenting a passage. We have rarely met with a more flagrant breach of the unwritten rule which prescribes that history, if it is to be worth the paper on which it is printed, must be written dispassionately. Miss Strickland (as every one knew who, like the writer of this notice, had the privilege of her acquaintance) entertained strong prejudices, but to accuse her of having stooped to anything ever approaching direct untruth is a statement which it is hoped few gentlemen would make; nor does it tend to increase confidence in the investigations of any one who approaches historical inquiries in a spirit so widely differing from that in which they ought to be conducted.

Miss Frere's obituary notice of her distinguished father, Sir Bartle Frere, is open to the objection that she has thus far given us almost as much of the history of his ancestry as of his own biography, an error which will, no doubt, hereafter disappear in future numbers of the journal, where the statesman's own life has alone to be presented to the reader. Yet we cannot but regret what seems to us a grave mistake. Sir Bartle Frere "made so much history" that one feels a natural impatience at being detained, on the way to it, by genealogical details of no very general interest. Haileybury, as it was, is well described, and full justice is done both to young Bartle Frere's exceptional success there, and to the singular influence exercised over the students by the worthy Sub-Dean (afterwards Dean) of the college, James Amiraux Jeremie, of whom Frere has left on record (p. 181) words of affection creditable alike to the tutor who could inspire, and to the pupil who could indite, them. No memory of the many which, to its old alumni, cluster about

Haileybury of yore, will be greener than that of the man who, without a tithe of Arnold's strength of character, impressed his pupils with the same feeling of mingled deference and affection which (teste Tom Brown) that remarkable "Ruler of young men and boys" universally commanded. "It is a shame," was the common Haileybury saying in Frere's time, "to vex little Jeremie; he always takes it so much to heart when one gets into a real mess."

"The boy is father to the man," and we await with pleasurable anticipation Miss Frere's account of the years which passed while her father, still in the prime of life, added to the dignity of a great man that of being a prominent statesman.

THE NEW SHIKARI.*

No reader can peruse this book, the second work of Colonel Barras, without deriving from it much amusement, and not a little information. The Colonel has, during his service, "gone in for" everything shootable and huntable. Falconry, now so unjustly neglected, and so rarely pursued, was an object of his close attention; and some of the most interesting passages in his first volume (p. 110, also Vol. II., p. 143) are devoted to this sport, so common, in former times, among ourselves, and, even now, so habitual among Indian Chiefs.

Whether quartered (for the gallant Colonel seems to have had even more than a fair average of changes of station in the course of his career), in Aden, Perim, Persia, Kathiawar, Sind, or Central India, he contrived to combine with his military duties a close attention to every possible chance of sport. Where there were none, he tried, on Ovid's principle, to make some:—

"Et, si nullus erit pulvis, tamen excute nullum."

Even at that desolate—yet most important—island, Perim, where he was stationed (and where, indeed, he was the sole European) for some months, he went to considerable expense (for a subaltern) in order to stock the barren rock with hares (which however, he never got, for all but one died on the short journey from Africa to Perim), and rabbits, which he managed to procure from Aden.

It is not always that a Shikari quand même has a keen sympathy with—may we not almost call it a fellow-feeling for?—the sufferings, and the happiness, of animals, and it is one of the most pleasant features of this book that, on so many occasions, this sympathy is evidenced in its pages. The "immutability of the East" seems to have profoundly impressed Colonel Barras. Throughout the East "the thing that hath been is the thing which shall be." This is well put in the words in which the writer reminds us (Vol. I. p. 43) that "Four miles outside our various cantonments all is as it was in the days of Abraham and Lot;" and, with an instinctive appreciation of the real state of the case, denied to few who, like Shikarries, enter into intimate intercourse with Natives of parts remote from European haunts, he adds, "Even the railway but serves to keep up and enhance the effect of this enchanted and trance-like repose, for it effectually localizes, along a narrow line, the changes insisted on by the importunate march of European civilisation."

Like his comrades, our author passed through the fearful ordeal of the Mutiny times. How many Natives were in that time of trial true to the Sahib or the Mem Sahib is well known; and the danger into which their fidelity often brought them is matter of notoriety. Yet it is grievous to think how often, during that period of universal distrust and suspicion, their worst foes were the very men whom they were perilling their lives to serve. Here is an instance which could be paralleled within the personal experience of many an officer. Faithful Natives really lived between Scylla and Charybdis. "One faithful Native adjutant," on sending up word to the European officers that an attempt would be made in half-an-hour to murder them, was asked why he had given such short notice.

"Sahib," he replied, "if I had given a day's warning, nothing would have happened, and you would yourselves have had me tried and condemned as a spreader of base and groundless charges, promulgated to raise myself by pulling down others. For you well know the mutineers never commit anything to writing; so that, until they have actually done something, nothing can be proved against them."

Those of our readers whom duty or Shikar has taken to Sind will appreciate the realistic account of a dust-storm given at p. 159 of Vol. II. "A warning tremor caused us to spring inside the last open door and secure it above and below with bolts. In an instant afterwards we found ourselves in complete darkness. Never have I seen light so thoroughly annihilated, even during the obscurest night. We could not see to get any matches, and, whilst groping about in search of them, the large dogs that got between our legs could only be felt—not the slightest trace of them was visible to the eye. Outside, the inner hedge that ran up to the portico could only just be discerned, whereas during the darkest nights something could always be made out of even the high road, altogether outside the premises. Surely this was darkness! It did not, however, last long. In six minutes it had come and gone like the genii of Oriental fable."

Our author could not have "knocked about" so much without some amusing experiences, or without having some entertaining anecdotes to tell. For these we must refer the reader to the work itself. But here is a fine instance of red tape. "The Commander of the Dalhousie had, as in duty bound, on one occasion reported:—'One towing-rope carried away,' meaning, of course, that the sea had ravished this treasure from the British Government. "Well," he said, "the return was sent back to me, with this command written opposite to my entry: 'Whoever carried this tow-rope away must be made to bring it back!'"

We thank Colonel Barras for an interesting book, the perusal of which will pleasantly beguile any reader's leisure hours.

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE.*

That every man has his double has from time immemorial been the popular belief, but it has been reserved for Mr. Stevenson to work into a novelette the old classical notion that everyone born into the world is endowed with two distinct principles of good and evil, which being in constant antagonism, hence arises the unaccountable medley of right and wrong which is the daily experience of every son of earth. The "strange case," however, goes somewhat beyond this; the idea being, that by the discovery of a drug, unknown to the rest of the world, Dr. Jekyll—when it suits his whim—is able to embody his evil principle in the shape and person of the luckless Mr. Hyde, who, entirely bad, and in no way good, is the personification of all that is odious, repugnant, and detestable. A veil, it is true, is drawn over his crimes, his vices, and his passions, but in the end he is portrayed as fleeing from justice, a murderer and an outcast, of course, safe from detection in the person of the highly-respected and respectable Dr. Jekyll. One day, however, the latter finds—horrible dictu—that the drug has had such an effect upon his constitution that he has become powerless to prevent a hitherto coveted power degenerating into a spontaneous and involuntary change from Jekyll to Hyde, and from Hyde to Jekyll. He had, indeed, "called up the spirits from the vasty deep," "but he was powerless to control the demons thus summoned and aroused. From that time he lived a life of terror and remorse; in constant dread of the law which his "alter ego" had outraged—a misery to himself, and a warning to those who attempt to dabble in the secrets of the occult and unknown world.

The idea is certainly original, and is worked out with considerable skill. The whole story is, as may be supposed, exciting to a degree; and those who want to pass the fitful hour with pleasure and a sense of novelty cannot do better than spend a shilling in purchasing the "Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

In the good old days weapons used to be styled "deadly," now they are "lethal"; if things go on in this fashion Englishmen will have a language so full of foreign words, that like some Oriental tongues it will not, should the speaker so wish, be "understanded" by the profanum vulgus, unacquainted with the derivation of high sounding, but to them unmeaning, terms.

THE MUNICIPALITY OF CALCUTTA.

It is not long since, under the guidance of the Rev. James Long, we traversed in spirit "Calcutta as it was." We have now to deal with Calcutta as it is, and with the governing powers which have made it what it is. Englishmen are said to have the gift of "adaptability," whatever that may mean. It is hardly by this term that we can designate their habit of taking with them all their habits, customs, and even games. We remember cricket forty years ago at Frankfort, where Englishmen could be counted on one's fingers. Football, as well as cricket, not to speak of croquet and lawn-tennis, is habitually played in Fiji. For all we know, there may be a "Home Rule" Parliament among the Papuans in New Guinea. And we could not, forsooth, rest until we had established a bad counterfeit of an English parish vestry in every town of any importance throughout India. Well meant, no doubt, but we know whither a certain road, paved with good intentions, leads. Vestries have, indeed, been in England superseded by "Boards." But it was well known that few of the better class ever attended—more shame for them—the average vestry, and it is notorious that few but pushing tradespeople or not less pushing solicitors care to canvass for the privilege of being exposed to the amenities of such a bear-garden as the average Local Board.

Hence, probably, arises, in some degree at least, the utter incapacity which distinguishes Boards at home. If this is done in the green tree, what can be expected in the dry? Is India likely to surpass England in ripening a production so exotic to it as a Municipality or Local Board?

Let facts answer. We will take as our text the Municipality of the metropolis of British India, the City of Palaces. The Pioneer shall describe for us the constitution of this notable body:—

The present constitution (says our contemporary) is, it appears, so designed as to result inevitably in an absolute tyranny of Bengalis over every class, race, and interest. They started with a majority on the Commission of 38 to 34 over all other races combined; this majority they converted into one of 20 to 10 in the Town Council. Not even the purely European wards were allowed the privilege of being represented by resident Europeans. Two enterprising Baboos from another part of the city usurped their place. This numerical superiority the Bengalis fully utilised by a diligent attendance, which other classes of the community would do well to emulate. The total attendances of Hindus numbered 1,460 against 281 of Mahomedans, 459 of Europeans, 76 of Parsis, and 11 of Jews. In the Town Council the Hindu attendances numbered 404 against 194 attendances put in by all the other classes combined. Thus the chances were that at any given meeting the Hindus would stand to the Europeans as 16 to 3. . . . In the suburbs the tyranny of Bengali Babooism has been still more complete. There, out of 150,000 Hindus, 29 came to the poll and 19 were elected, "3-5ths of the inhabitants thus usurping 19-20ths of the representation." The 96,000 Mahomedans were not allowed a single representative; 4,000 Europeans contrived to secure the election of a single candidate.

As the tree, so its fruit. And more than one passage in the late Parliamentary return containing the reports of the Army Sanitary Commission has given rise to great searchings of heart in those, who realise what it would be to extend the jurisdiction of this peculiarly constituted body over all the suburbs of Calcutta. It is not pleasant to read that the sanitation of the city has, during the past year, retrograded. Yet one cannot be surprised at this on reading that,—

The cleansing arrangements were quite inadequate to the public necessities, and did not reach the interior of bustees or house compounds, where the real epidemic disease causes were to be found. There was no systematised sanitary department, complete in all its parts, and energetically directed from one centre, and as a result there were partial failures in these very departments where such failures were sure to be detected by increased mortality, especially from epidemic diseases.

Again,—

The local causes of the epidemic death-rates have been only very partially reached by the permanent works.

This is bad enough. Yet the subjoined particulars, to which the Editor of the Sanitary Record has been good enough to direct our attention, are so startling that, had they reached us from any less reliable authority than Mr. Ernest Hart, we should have hesitated to credit the possibility of such flagrant disregard of all common sense and common humanity.

About the year 1881 (we read) the Municipal Corporation (of Calcutta) was prosecuted for creating a nuisance by improperly filling up a tank in the vicinity of Shurreef Duftry's Lane. The evidence given during the proceedings went to show that dead cats, dogs, rats, and every sort of decayed and decaying animal and vegetable matter, to the depth of some ten feet, was recklessly shot into the tank, the water from which had previously been pumped out, and above this mass of abominations a top dressing of some two or three feet of so-called "earth," which very largely consists of sludge obtained from the manholes and gullies of the sewers, road-scrappings, and slush, completed in 1883 the process of filling in the tank. It appears that the most easterly and south-easterly portion of the tank having been filled in subsequently to the prosecution, the deposits at this end of the tank consisted solely of sludge, slush, and road-scrappings, and this part is now the site of a recreation-ground, on which a bathing-platform has been erected. Within a little more than two years of the completion of this huge deposit of filth the Council had permitted the erection upon it of huts for the accommodation of the lower classes. The particulars of the scandal having been published in the local press, the building operations were, in September last, temporarily suspended, but were again permitted in the following month.

Various circumstances, of locality and climate, have from time immemorial combined to render Calcutta the hotbed of cholera. It is not long since (ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, 1885, p. 673) Mr. Long reminded us that one of the earliest buildings in Calcutta was the temple of Ula Uta Devi, the goddess of cholera. Those who believe in the power of this divinity will henceforth have the more reason to propitiate her, for her opportunities of destruction are being deliberately increased. Though, as Mr

Ernest Hart remarks, cholera will not reign alone. Typhoid fever of the most virulent type is another scourge employed by Nature to mark her resentment at such wilful infraction of her plainest laws:—

It must be apparent to all that the Town Council, by allowing the accumulation of this filthy deposit, has permitted the poisoning of the air, earth, and water with substances which may very possibly spread far and wide the germs of some fearful epidemic; while the fact that no one can predict how far the danger may extend lends additional gravity to the proceeding. . . . What are we to think of a Council that permits building upon such a site within a little more than two years of its completion, and without demanding the separation of the dwelling from the soil by means of an impervious floor?

When we consider that the office of Governor-General has been held, and will doubtless again be held, by some of England's foremost statesmen, and what might be the consequences were one of them, say Lord Dufferin (absit omen!), to be struck down owing to the neglect of the most ordinary sanitary precautions, and succeeded even temporarily (possibly during a crisis of the utmost gravity) by one of the tenth-rate politicians who usually figure as Governors of the subordinate Presidencies, we can but share Mr. Hart's amazement that the educated classes of Calcutta (including, be it remembered, the cream of the Civil Service of all the Presidencies) can calmly permit such proceedings, fraught with the highest dangers, it may be to themselves, certainly to many others. Whatever the remedy it must be found. The loss of life in India from preventable diseases is already sufficiently alarming. It cannot be permitted that the ghastly record should be indefinitely extended by the ignorance and supineness of a local Council.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the 22nd January; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad to the 20th January.

THE Times Correspondent telegraphs from Rangoon the arrival at that port, on the 6th, of the Viceroy, Lady Dufferin, and suite. Every preparation had been made to welcome them, and they entered the city through a building representing the façade of Killyleagh Castle, the ancestral home of Lady Dufferin's family. After warmly acknowledging the brilliant services, during the war, of the Volunteers, who were the guard of honour on the landing stage, Lord Dufferin received several deputations. The only political allusion which he let fall was the following, spoken in reply to an address from the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce:—

Although for some time past the affairs of Burma have been occupying the attention of the Indian Government, you can hardly expect me, immediately after my arrival, to say anything in regard to them. After my return from Mandalay I may, perhaps, have an opportunity of saying a few words to you in regard to the future prospects of the country. In the meantime, I shall be only too happy to profit by any information which such old and experienced residents as yourselves may be good enough to place at my disposal.

LORD DUFFERIN's stay in Burma, and his movements generally, will depend on the questions that come before him. If he finds that Burmese affairs require it, he will make a longer stay than he had originally intended at Mandalay. The arrangements connected with the administration of the upper Province are as yet unsettled, as Lord Dufferin intends to decide on them after a personal investigation on the spot.

THE Correspondent, being granted an interview, found Lord Dufferin engaged in the study of Persian; and he incidentally mentioned that he usually devoted Sunday to the study of that literature.

THE Commander-in-Chief proposes to make a tour of inspection in Upper Burma before returning to India. It is probable that four regiments will be added to the force now in the Province.

WITH reference to the alleged photographing of dacoits at executions we have received from the India Office the following:—

From Viceroy, Feb. 2.

I have received telegram from Prendergast, confirming statement to the effect that the persons executed by the military had been already tried and condemned by civil court, presided over by Sladen.

The Provost-Marshal on two occasions took photographs of the condemned, but did not arrange details of execution so as to suit his camera, as alleged. Condemned men were blindfolded, and were consequently unaware of what was going on, and no delay took place.

It also seems true that evidence was extorted by the assistance of the Provost-Marshal in the manner described.

The Alompra pretender was executed after trial before Burmese Durbar, presided over by Colonel Sladen.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST has issued a general order, forbidding executions to take place except in the case of criminals sentenced to death by civil officers.

THERE has been some talk of selling the Burmese railways to a private company, surely a retrograde step. We can hardly be surprised to read that the proposal is generally disapproved of. As the existing railways pay nearly six per cent. on the capital invested, there seems to be no good reason for the Government to sell them.

THE Meng Woon Prince, an aspirant to the Burmese throne, left Pondicherry for Saigon with the consent of the French. It will be requisite carefully to watch his movements.

WE have more than once inserted extracts from Native papers, deprecating our annexation of Burma. The following from Sir Madhava Rao is worth reprinting, "if only," says the Times, "as a proof of how little the Native Press really represents the most thoughtful and intelligent of the Native community." He says:—

It is strange how hastily the Native Press has condemned this measure. A statesman of Lord Dufferin's calibre is sure to justify it completely. That Press might at least have tried to conceive possible grounds justifying the measure. The habit of conceiving a possible explanation is well worth cultivation by those who deal in politics. It would promote the charitable construction of State action, check hasty judgment, develop the capacity for political reasoning, promote mutual confidence between rulers and subjects and give greater weight to public opinion.

THE last news from the Afghan Frontier Commission comes from Charshambeh. On Jan. 30th we read as follows, while a later despatch on Feb. 1 announces 44 degrees of frost, which great cold was found compatible with the perfect health of the whole party:—

Mr. Merk, the political officer, has returned from the Helmund, after accompanying the return party so far.

The Russian officers are visiting their English colleagues here. The survey continues to make progress. Work should begin early in March, and with luck it may be finished by the end of April.

All the members of the Commission are well.

GOORKHA recruiting is still slack; it is likely enough that this is partly attributable to the as yet unsettled state of the country.

STEPS are at length being taken to arm the entire Native Army with the new Martini-Enfield rifle. We hope that attention will be paid, not only to the goodness, but also to the length of the bayonet attached to this new weapon. Russian bayonets do not err on the side of shortness.

WE think that the Indian Government have acted wisely, as well as humanely, in taking in hand the organisation of the conveyances for the Mecca pilgrims. They have, we read—

Taken a new departure in the matter of the care of Mahomedan pilgrims on their way to Mecca. Not only has it appointed a Mahomedan protector of pilgrims at Bombay, but it has also arranged with Messrs. Cook to personally conduct the pilgrims. The firm undertakes to open pilgrim offices at Bombay and Jeddah, and to make arrangements with the railway and steamboat companies for the proper conveyance and accommodation of the pilgrims, in accordance with the Government regulations. The Government has directed the local officials and the protector of pilgrims to work in harmony with Messrs. Cook, to make known the terms of conveyance, and to assist in disposing of tickets.

ON opening the tenders for the loan of thirty lakhs required by the Calcutta Port Trust for the purpose of constructing wet docks it was found that the total amount of the tenders was only nineteen lakhs, of which a sum of Rs. 8,66,000 was accepted at ninety-five. The loan will be kept open for an amount not exceeding twelve lakhs, and tenders at ninety-seven will be accepted for a few days. The interest offered was 5½ per cent., and the minimum fixed was ninety-five.

THE Natives, with whom Sir R. Thompson has not generally been a favourite, seem to expect great things from his successor; and are, the Bengal Times thinks, likely to be disappointed:—

A correspondent (says the Bengal Times) writes to a Calcutta contemporary:—"Sir Rivers Thompson's period of service draws to a close, and those who have made His Honour the butt of calumny and ridicule will soon be relieved from his presence. And their champion will also retire, in the natural course of events, from the Council Chamber. Sir S. C. Bayley, the coming Governor, is expected to redress all the grievances which have so long formed the staple of Bengal politics, and that community will be translated, as a Native correspondent states, from purgatory to paradise." We have known Sir Steuart Colvin Bayley since he was in the Bengal Secretariat, and we can confidently assert that if our Native friends expect any inordinate favours from him, any unjust leanings towards their "cause," they are doomed to disappointment.

THE trial of the sixty-eight Talavias concerned in the recent fatal riot at Broach was concluded on the 29th ult., after occupying the Court for twenty days. The judge held that the evidence showed the rioters to have collected with weapons, intending to kill the collector, and to have chased Mr. Prescott down a lane for some seventy yards. He was unable to accept the theory that they were guilty only of rioting. The evidence against all except fourteen was overwhelming. Three of the ringleaders received a sentence of death, subject to confirmation by the High Court, fifty-one were sentenced to transportation for life, and fourteen were acquitted.

THE Civil and Military Gazette hears from Mardan that a sharp encounter has taken place in the low hills on the Buner border between the Guides and a party of the blockaded tribe. It was announced, some days ago, that some three hundred badmashes had come down from Buner territory, and that a detachment of the Mardan garrison had been sent to watch them. The Bunerwals have been driven from their position with considerable loss; but we regret that Lieutenant-Colonel R. C. Hutchinson, of the Guides, was severely wounded. Our casualties, with this exception, are slight; one sowar killed and three wounded.

FROM Colombo we hear, under date 7th Jan., that the District Judge, at the close of the inquiry into the loss of the Indus, suspended Captain Breeze's certificate for twelve months, for neglect of his obvious duty in not heaving the lead as soon as land was sighted; and for taking a course without allowing for the set of the current to the south-west. The nautical assessors blame the Captain for running on his anchor, caused by not going astern with the engine. We believe that the unfortunate Captain had been about a quarter of a century in the Company's employ as commander.

THE Turkestan Official Gazette states that on the 7th of November last, there sailed from Kazalinks, in the Syr Darya province for the Aral Sea, the steamer Taskent, one of the vessels of the old Aral flotilla commanded by Captain Brukhoff. This steamer is to proceed to the Amu Darya, so as to make it the first vessel of the new flotilla on that river. Its Captain already knows the river well, having ascended it once before in the steamer Samarkand as high up as Khojah Saleh, that is to say, as far as the shortest conceivable distance from the Afghan frontier.

It was not to be supposed that the Native Press would silently acquiesce in the new Income-tax, which, while affecting only 500,000 persons, yields to Government eleven hundred thousand pounds sterling. Here are some of the utterances of our Native contemporaries:—

Before the war broke out (says the Shamayak) we said that India would have to bear the charges for the same. Now that is really going to be done. That the English are governing India for the Indians is mere words. The English have not as yet been able to satisfy themselves by sucking the blood of the Natives. We are well aware that the Government will not listen to anyone. In spite of that we hope that it will consider the position of persons who are not in affluent circumstances.

The authorities (observes the Suravi and Pataka) are thinking of imposing the income-tax again in India. This tax is in many respects better than other taxes, for it will affect the official English as well as others. We should not have objected to this tax if it had been imposed after the abolition of more obnoxious taxes. But although that is not to be done, the income-tax is to be imposed. Our blood curdles when we think on the matter.

The Sahachar opines that Lord Dufferin will probably gain a bad name. The income-tax will affect all classes of people. We think that men who have less than Rs.1,000 per annum ought not to pay it. Besides, if an income-tax be imposed, the license-tax ought to be repealed. The imposition of the income tax will do one good thing. It will affect the Europeans, and thus we shall be able to secure the sympathy of our conquerors.

We remember (adds the Dacca Prokash) the unbearable sufferings from the income-tax. Therefore the Hindus and the Mohamedans, the zemindars and others, ought to unitedly protest against this obnoxious income-tax. Because we did not properly agitate against the license-tax, the Government says that the people do not suffer much from the same. Let not a similar charge be brought against us now. Our contemporaries ought to bear this in mind, and, leaving other matters, turn their attention to this subject.

We learn from the Pioneer that Shah Jehan, prophet, priest, and King of the Zhobwals, with all his personal followers and the chiefs of Zhob, has at last come into Duki to Captain Gaisford, Assistant Political Agent, to make his submission to Sir Robert Sandeman, in accordance with the terms of the agreement made with the Zhobwals at the end of last year's expedition. The submission of Shah Jehan at this season has a certain importance, as it permits of British influence being extended without check to the Gomal Pass.

THERE is, says the same paper, reason to believe that the Punjab Frontier Force will come under the orders of the Commander-in-Chief almost immediately, to be followed, presumably, by the Hyderabad Contingent.

A DESPATCH is said to have been received by the Government of India from the Secretary of State, suggesting certain measures, which meet with the approval of the India Office, for removing the block in promotion of officers of the Indian Telegraph Department.

FROM the usual circular of Messrs. George White and Co., of 2, Great Tower-street, we learn that the total deliveries of Indian tea during 1885 were about four and a half million pounds in excess of 1884. No doubt the bad weather during the past month has had a detrimental effect on clearances as well as on trade generally. The arrivals during January were heavy, but owing to quicker dispatch, teas have been sent forward earlier, as we have received four and a half millions of this season's crop from India more than to same date last year, so that even should the total available for Great Britain reach 65½ millions, the excess has already arrived.

Chit Chat.

HAPPY Assam! The inhabitants are not within a "measurable distance of the higher activity of the Babu of Bengal." It might be wished that the remark were more generally applicable. "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing," sung an English poet. The "Indian problem" was not invented in his day, or it might have been thought that he heard of the Indian delegates.

"GOVERNMENT at home is always carried on amidst a discordant chorus of conflicting nonsense." This is charming, but it takes the breath away that it is written aent the apostle of a leading class of politicians—the venerable John Bright, of Birmingham notoriety.

Mr. Stuart Cumberland has at length, it is said, solved the problem which has puzzled mankind since the time of the Tower of Babel. He can read the thoughts of those who are thinking in a strange tongue. What a magnificent linguist he must be!

AMONGST the Khonds of Madras a curious mode obtains of settling a dispute. It consists of an appeal of the "Water God"—in other words, the rivals dive under water, and whoever remains longest without coming to the surface wins the day, so that a person advanced in years has but a small chance as compared with his juniors possessed of more breath and powers of endurance.

INDIA is progressing. The Times of India has this month, for the first time, been printed both sides at once, an advantage which enables the paper to go to press half-an-hour later and be delivered to subscribers earlier. Of course other journals must now follow suit.

THERE is a story of an officer who, in older days, upon hearing that a railway was in contemplation between Calcutta and Bombay, exclaimed, "Thank God, we shall now escape the horrid Red Sea." Fortunately for him, when he got his appointment competitive "examinations" were not the order of the day, or he would have not stood high on the list under the head Geography.

AN old servant, so the story runs, grieving over the death of her mistress, declined to be comforted by the assurance that the latter was in heaven. "No," exclaimed the faithful attendant, "she'll want some one to look after her." It was gently hinted that the angels would perform this necessary office. "No, no," rejoined the disconsolate veteran, "they can't be expected to know missus's ways. I'm certain they'd never put up with her temper."

THE Indian team, which it is much to be hoped will this year lend an additional interest to the Wimbledon Meeting, ought to comprise some crack shots; 527 points out of 600 was the score of Sergeant Davis for the Western India Rifle Associations gold medal, while Captain Pratt and Sergeant Selman each secured fifty-nine out of sixty for the Sportsmen's Contest.

IN an account of the execution of the Khoja murderer the Times of India says that "the bolt was drawn and his sufferings ceased." If this be accurate there must be something wrong with the Christian religion, which teaches that there is an after life, happiness or the reverse, in which depends upon a person's deeds and actions during the present existence.

AGAIN we ask, what is fame? "It will be remembered that another distinguished officer of the Telegraph Department, Sir Henry Mance, recently received the distinction of K.C.S.I. for his services." Very nice, but it is not true; he was made a Knight Bachelor, and yet six months after the honour is conferred the world has forgotten what it was.

MR. GARSTIN is an unlucky man. While on tour near Madras, in the Madras Presidency, he was brutally assaulted. The cause is somewhat laughable. He was mistaken for Mr. Crole, the Collector of the District, "who is unpopular among the people, and whose life it was intended to take." But it is strange that the people of a district should be so incensed against the head officer of the locality, and yet not know him even by sight, or rather not sufficiently well to be able to distinguish him from a visitor who chanced to put in an appearance just when the "Burra Sahib" was wanted for purposes of destruction. But the importance of the whole matter is derived from the circumstance that the attack upon a high official—for Mr. Garstin is a member of the Madras Board of Revenue—is scarcely consistent with that respect for and dread of their rulers which is the keynote of the British rule in India.

A NATIVE pleader, so says the Pioneer, was heard to remark that "the income-tax would bring Russia ten years sooner to the Indian frontier." This may or may not be, but such a remark clearly indicates an idea in the Native mind that sooner or later the Tartar hordes will swarm on the North-West Frontier of Hindustan—a commentary this on "masterly inactivity."

It will be remembered that Sir James Stephen recently published an elaborate treatise to show that Warren Hastings was innocent of the guilt which has for upwards of a century attached to him in regard to the execution of Nuncomar. Mr. Beveridge has an article forthcoming in the Calcutta Review, to the tune of eighty pages, to show that the learned Puisne Judge is wrong in his inferences. The public may be tempted to think that when a Governor-General acts in such a way that it needs two volumes to prove him right, and little less than 100 pages to show that he was wrong, there was not much "Zabardasti" in the case.

To sacrifice every consideration to the paramount necessity of flattering and conciliating the noisiest, shallowest, least deserving classes of the Indian community has been, according to the Pioneer, the "ignoble pursuit" of Mr. Reynolds, of Bengal notoriety—and the result? "He has thrown away the prestige due to a respectable if not a brilliant career," and more than this, he has succeeded in reducing the city of palaces to a "malodorous capital." This is hard hitting with a vengeance.

MR. COLQUHOUN, whose writings and lectures in this country have thrown a flood of light upon Eastern politics, opportunely points out that Russia has not, in her intrigues in Central Asia, the excuse that she must find new openings for her surplus population. She is simply a military power inflated with the lust of military conquest and prestige. All India knows this, but is Westminster alive to this significant circumstance?

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE LIFE AND WORK OF SYED AHMED KHAN, C.S.I.*

Biography has always been considered one of the fine arts. To have one's mind full of a subject, yet not to be unduly engrossed with it; to have the deepest interest in the hero of the piece, yet to keep the mind open to discern his smallest faults or inconsistencies, these are powers not given to all. Lues Boswelliana—to use Macaulay's well-known phrase—is common enough; though we do not remember ever having met with a case in which a biographer "wrote down" the subject of his work.

The difficulty of writing a man's life is, however, intensified when the man is yet not only alive but—as we hope Syed Ahmed is—in excellent health. It is not given to everyone to read his biography in his lifetime—not to say that such biographies are too often the work of interested toadies. The late Lord Brougham had, indeed, the pleasure of knowing what all mankind thought of him, his death having been prematurely announced, and his "obituary notice" published in all the papers—a matter concerning which the late Postmaster of Penrith (since transferred to a wider sphere of duty) can tell many an amusing anecdote.

Colonel Graham has, we think, well grappled with the difficulty of writing the life of a man yet in the land of the living, and his extracts will not seem unduly long to anybody interested in the life of one who, since the decease of the late Sir Salar Jung, is certainly as distinguished a Mussulman as any in India.

Born in 1817, of good Herati family, Syed Ahmed (whose father was the only individual permitted to sit in the presence of the titular Emperor of Delhi), entered the British service in a subordinate post in the Sudder Ameen's Court at Delhi at the age of twenty; and, meanwhile receiving rapid promotion, soon made his mark in the literary world. Delhi, the antiquities of which he had described with much ability, was now no longer to be his sphere of duty, and it was at Bijour that the Mutiny of 1857 found him. At a station like Bijour there were, of course, many Europeans. They were assembled in one house, and known to be so assembled; no wonder then, that the house was surrounded by a turbulent band of some hundred of rebels. Syed Ahmed brought the Europeans all off in safety. The narrative of this performance (p. 22) is of the deepest interest. With the conclusions as to the causes of the Mutiny arrived at in the Syed's very interesting paper (pp. 36, 57) many will concur. There was a firm belief that Government wished to change the religion of the people by fair means or foul, and this belief, says the Syed, was confirmed when it was found that legislative matters were to be kept from the cognizance of Natives by their exclusion from the Legislative Council. As to the prevalence, both among Mussulmans and Hindoos, of the idea that the British Government did desire to do this thing, and that the fear of being, by force or fraud, subjected to the loss of eternal happiness did contribute more than anything else to the outbreak of the mutinies, this has been repeatedly shown. Nor could any stronger proof be given than in the words of the Syed. He tells us that ever since the step, which was taken the year of the great drought, 1837, of rearing orphans in the Christian faith, it was "looked on throughout the N.W. Provinces as an example of the schemes of Government. It has been commonly believed that Government . . . maintained missionaries at its own cost. . . Many covenanted officers and military men have been in the habit of talking to their subordinates about religion . . . and thus it happened that, in the course of time, no man felt sure that his creed would last even his own lifetime" (p. 41).

Being fully impressed with the expediency of giving his two sons an European education, the Syed visited England in 1869, receiving his C.S.I. from the hands of the Duke of Argyll, then Secretary of State for India. He seems to have enjoyed, and to have profited by, his journey, his remarks on which (pp. 116, 599) shows much quickness of observation.

The great public services rendered by the Syed in founding educational institutions are well known. The Aligarh Scientific Society, the Ghazipore College, the Mahomedan Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh, all owe to him their inception, and, mainly, their prosperity. His single idea seems to be to promote their welfare, and it is characteristic of the man that, when, in 1882, at Hyderabad, as the guest of the late Sir Salar Jung, he refused the invitations to dinner showered on him by the nobles of the City, "but he invariably begged them (p. 326) to give him the money, that the dinners would cost, as donations to his College fund," thus clearing Rs. 30,000.

Syed Ahmed, having now retired, after a long and meritorious service, from Government employ, is usefully occupied in promoting the welfare of the various institutions which owe their existence to him. And this we sincerely hope that he may long be spared to do.

The special value of this book is the rare insight it gives into the views of an unusually intelligent Mussulman, who laments the want of sympathy between his race and ours. There is, he thinks, much community of sentiment and of teaching in his Holy

Book and in ours; he quotes the New Testament as often as the Koran; and lays (p. 237) much stress on this passage from the latter: "Thou shalt surely find (among the unbelievers) those to be the most inclinable to entertain friendship for true believers who say 'we are Christians.'"

Perhaps, had some British Statesmen recognised the fact that, in point of creed, we differ not much more from Islam than we do from the bastard so-called Christianity of the Russian Church, they would not have allowed a morbid sentimentality to prevent their making the small advances to the Mahomedan Powers which, besides confirming the loyalty of our Mussulman fellow-subjects in India, would have secured to England inestimable political advantages.

JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.*

Dr. Edkins's paper on "Ancient Navigation in the Indian Ocean," to which the first place in this number of the Journal is given, is a very carefully worked-out series of deductions from all the authorities on this subject, which the writer's research has induced him to collate. His starting point is "Ur of the Chaldees;" and he shows how, from the Babylonian province, so many sciences have "worked their way" eastward, thus reversing the common belief that all civilisation came Eothen, from the rising of the Sun. His proof, that the use of the sun-dial (the first mention of which is that (in Scripture) of the sun-dial of Abaz, B.C. 740) to determine latitude, is originally Babylonian, seems conclusive; the relation, too, between the height of the gnomon, the length of its shadow, and the line connecting the two—which has, in the form of the 47th Proposition of Euclid's first book, "floored" so many examinees, seems (p. 18) to have been first investigated in Babylonia. The learned doctor, however, takes us back in spirit to times of marvellous antiquity. For instance (p. 7), "the art of writing may have been communicated to China from Mesopotamia about B.C. 2500," that is, much anterior to the date usually assigned as the probable period of the existence of Abraham. We quote here but the conclusion of the paper, the whole of which is extremely suggestive. Speaking of China as having (p. 27), like India, been greatly influenced by Babylonian civilisation, Dr. Edkins says, "The argument for Babylonian influence on China in the Chow dynasty must rest mainly on evidence from the history of astrology, astronomical instruments, metrology, and astronomy. The legends of monsters and impossible nations might come from India quite as well. But astrology, and the foundations of astronomy, could come from Babylon alone."

Mr. Bertin's account of the Bushmen—who, though not Asiatic, are the subject of an interesting article in this Journal—well deserves perusal. The Bushman, or rather Bosjesman, race, has received perhaps less attention than it deserves, representing, as it does, a distinct branch among the African races.

One can never learn too early or too late. Yet we cannot help fearing that the grammar of the Bushmen's language, however important—and that, in its relations to the Khoikhoi (Hottentot) it is so, Mr. Bertin abundantly proves—will scarcely find as many students as it perhaps deserves. Such is the difficulty of reproducing the peculiar sounds, denominated clicks, that even such indefatigable tongue-learners as the missionaries did not so much as attempt to master it, and summarily dismissed all inquiries, saying that the Bushmen must be taught another language to be civilised and Christianised (p. 58). It is to be regretted that the results of Bleek's researches—some thousands of pages—are entombed in Sir G. Grey's library at Cape Town, whence they cannot too soon be brought to light.

Africa commands yet another article in the shape of a journal of Colonel R. L. Playfair's wanderings in the land of the Khomair (Khomiri), a tribe whose "invented" (p. 35) aggressions led to the French protectorate of Tunis, between which country and Algeria they were wedged in. Much of this province is as susceptible of cultivation as it was in the time of the Romans, whose bridges and aqueducts are still to be seen, and whose inscriptions abound.

Another country, of which the ancients made much more than do the moderns, is "the debatable land," in which our Afghan Commission is now engaged; and an exhaustive exploration of which would assuredly yield important results. The paper before us, the sixth in the number, does not, however, deal with the remains of Classical, but with those of Buddhist, times. The caves on the Murghab, both at Penjeh and Bala Murghab, seem, from their narrow entrances, to have been refuges in time of peril; man here, as elsewhere, burrowing like a rabbit, so soon as the approach of danger is anticipated.

Poetry is represented, and well represented, by a free but very fluent paraphrase (from the Arabic) of the Lament of Maisun, the divorced Bedouin wife of Mu'awiya, by Mr. Freeland; and the issue closes with a spirited translation by Mr. Guy Le Strange of the Persian play, the Alchemist, by Mirza Fath-'Ali, of Derbend, a performance deserving of every commendation.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

The first paper in this number concludes Colonel Malleson's biography of Eugene of Savoy, a commander who, if Napoleon's opinion be accurate, that the greatest General is he who makes the fewest mistakes, must lay claim to a very high rank in the roll of strategists, and whose career as a whole we hope shortly to notice at greater length.

The short Essay contributed by Mr. Francis H. Miller, under the unpretentious title of "The Red, White, and Blue," is really a valuable contribution, as placing before the reader, in a popular form, the history of the national flag, and the way in which, in the good old days, when the "low-water mark of France was the boundary of England," we insisted on due honour being paid it. We will quote but one passage on the latter head. Even Charles II. insisted on this point. Here are his orders, dated 1674:—"Upon your meeting with any ship or ships within His Majesty's seas—which for your better guidance herein you are to take notice, extend to Cape Finisterre—belonging to any foreign prince or State, you are to expect that in their passage by you they strike their topsail and take in their flag, in acknowledgment of His Majesty's sovereignty in those seas; and if any shall refuse to do it, or offer to resist, you are to use your utmost endeavours to compel them thereunto, and in nowise to suffer any dishonour to be done to His Majesty."

Without saying of the observance of this deference to the British flag in British waters, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, it is clear enough that it was strictly, and even sternly, enforced in Tudor times, in which, indeed, the most striking instance of its enforcement occurred, for we read, "The ship conveying Philip the Second of Spain to England for the purpose of being united in marriage to Queen Mary, was fired into by the Lord Admiral of England for wearing the Spanish flag in the narrow seas."

The Paper on Methuen's Horse is continued up to the period of its disbandment; and Sir Charles Warren's admirable management is brought into strong contrast with the wretched bungling of some of his predecessors. Excellent practical hints as to the equipment of any force similar to Methuen's Irregulars close an interesting and valuable article. We are reminded by the accounts given of the last inspection by Frederick the Great, so characteristic of the energy and minute attention to details which distinguished that great soldier, of his illustrious descendant, the present Emperor of Germany, whose model the Great Frederic is; and are moved to hope that his military ardour may not lead him, too, to undue exposure and consequent premature death. Passing the "Captain's Yarns," the interest of which is fairly well sustained, we find in the narrative given by "Ignotus" of his experiences in Egypt a description of the Pyramids and of the marvels of Karnak, where the remaining centre columns of the Hall of the Kings, 330 feet long by 170 feet broad, are of such stupendous magnitude that six men, with arms extended, failed to span them. "On Leave" brings us to more serious matter, and gives a really appalling proof of the way in which our gallant troops are sent to the battlefield practically unarmed. It would be mere madness to ignore the gravity of such facts, as that, in the 2nd Regiment out of 1,050 bayonets examined, 50 "broke," 300 were "too soft," and all the rest were "bad." As long we have Administrations in which parties interested in the supplies of articles are allowed to occupy important posts, we cannot but feel an imperfect confidence that such neglect, to use the mildest term, may not recur. This paper worthily brings to a close a very interesting number.

THE NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.†

In this number the accounts of the various feats of bravery which won the Victoria Cross are continued up to the battle of Balaclava, the portrait being a very good one of Surgeon-Major Mocrat, V.C., C.B., to whose coolness and pluck full justice is done. The 17th Lancers were well to the fore on that eventful day, securing no less than three crosses.

A paper by Surgeon-Major Evatt, descriptive of the Medical Department of a British Army Corps (36,000 men) in the field, is instructive as well as most interesting. To learn, that in the Crimea, "a few thousands include all who fell by the fire or the weapons of the Russians," but that an army of 18,000 men perished by disease, indeed affords food for reflection. Considering the enormous importance of practical training, and system, in surgical work, it is lamentable to read that "there does not exist in our great Empire, at home, or abroad, a model field hospital that should be a pattern for us all for war. . . . A completely equipped field hospital, a pattern, a model, a standard, a criterion to work by, does not exist." Nor is the prospect of reinforcing the department in case of emergency a bright one, for we are told, "No one outside the Army knows what a field hospital is or what it has to do: foremost of all in their ignorance are the civil doctors of England." We think that Dr. Evatt's lucid description will enlighten the most ignorant: the illustrations, too, are excellent.

An article on Scindia and his rock-fortress of Gwalior—now at length his own again—leads to a paper by the Editor on the "British Bayonet Scare." However complete the breakdown in the past, it would seem that adequate means are at length being taken to prevent its recurrence. We do not quite see why the gallant Editor should pitch into "the Pressmen." Past faults are admitted by him. Indeed, he says in burning words (alluding primarily to the jammed cartridges, but equally applicable to the swords and bayonets), "Need this awful experience have ever been procured? I say it ought not to have been obtained, nor would it have been, if British officials had faithfully done their duty to their Queen and country." What, then, is his quarrel with the Press? But for the present Editor of the Army and Navy Gazette the green coffee affair would have been hushed up; not even the farcical, mutual whitewashing, conclave, facetiously termed an inquiry, would have been held at Chelsea Hospital; but for the Press we should have heard little enough of the jammed cartridges, or of bayonets, such that not one could be passed out of the entire number supplied to a regiment. We believe that, in many respects, the Press has been the soldier's best friend. Nor are we reassured at reading, in to-day's Times, that even our new bayonets are to come, not from Sheffield, but from Germany.

"Europe in Arms" deals, in this issue, with the German Navy, and the particulars therein given as to its unexampled progress of late years may well make people ponder what would be the consequences were political circumstances to bring about a coalition, hostile to ourselves, between the German and any other powerful navy.

"The Parliamentary Generals of the Great Civil War" and their operations down to, and including, the decisive battle of Naseby, are vividly brought by description before the mind and by illustrations before the eye; and the account of the final conflict is marked by brevity and clearness. The number is, in all respects, a good one.

CASTES AND TRIBES FOUND IN INDIA.*

Everyone who has paid any attention to Oriental matters is aware that India is a land of caste, yet how few, if cross-examined on the subject, could answer any two consecutive questions with intelligence. We confess, indeed, that, in common, we fancy, with not a few of our readers, we are in no good way anent this matter. We had been wont, for instance, to think that caste was a quasi-religious institution confined to the Hindus, but we learn, with no inconsiderable degree of astonishment, that converts, especially to Islam, commonly retain their old caste name, while it is by no means the rule that all the members of a single caste profess the same religion. We avow, too, with shame and confusion of face that we had not the slightest notion that there are as many as 1,929 different castes in India, and no less than forty-seven which contain more than a million of souls a-piece; nor can we conceal that we were ignorant of the circumstance that the same caste appears in different provinces as following divergent trades. To give a notable instance, the "Dom" of the North-West is the professional hangman and corpse-burner, while his kinsman of Assam is so punctilious that he will not eat save in clothes set apart for the particular purpose of meals!

This, and much more, we have learned from Mr. Kitts' valuable compendium, which is a complete mine of information. The labour in preparing a work of this nature must have been enormous, and we are deeply indebted to that gentleman for the pains he has taken to elucidate a somewhat abstruse subject, and for the light he has thrown on a matter of which the ordinary world knows, we fear, but little.

deserted, when she found he would not marry her. She will not, without revealing her history, accept an offer of marriage from a wealthy widower with two children, and entrusts to her mother a letter containing a narrative of all the circumstances. She then marries the widower, Mr. Drew, from whose conduct she is unable to infer whether the letter was given him. A direct question her husband parries, and she cannot make inquiry of her mother, who has meanwhile died. Drew wishes to push an invention into favourable notice at the War Office, casually and unwittingly meets his wife's betrayer, accepts his proffered help, and invites him to his home, where this Masterton, the villain of the piece, at once recognises in Mrs. Drew his former victim, and as speedily falls in love with her stepdaughter. All goes in the end well, the villain over-reaches himself, by intriguing in another quarter, and is unmasked in the presence of Mrs. Drew and the young lady. He revenges himself by throwing on the table Mrs. Drew's letters to himself, and departs. This, and the next scene, where Mrs. Drew, in an agony of uncertainty and terror, rejoins her husband, who is calmly burning the incriminating epistles unread, and is by him (who has all along been in receipt of her penitent communication) tenderly embraced, are among the best in the book, which is well written, and will be generally liked.

THE INDIAN TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT.

We have more than once incidentally referred to the undoubted grievances of the Indian Telegraph Department; and, as the subject has again come under official consideration, it may be well to inquire what these really are. A Memorial on the subject, sent in late last year, has been for some time before us, and its statements are, as in all such matters should be the case (not only forcibly put, but) corroborated by citations of official documents. The gist of the complaint can be stated in a word—block of promotion, owing to the non-fulfilment of Government promises.

In 1857, when the Indian Telegraph Department had been in existence seven years, it was decided to introduce the "Morse" system of telegraphy, and Sir W. O'Shaughnessy, the Head of the Department, was deputed to England to obtain instruments and operators. Of the latter, seventy-four, "chiefly orphan sons of officers of the Indian Army," were instructed in the use of the instruments, and despatched to India, being appointed to the various posts in such a manner as not to interfere with the prospects of the previously existing staff. They were provided with fair salaries, and retirement was compulsory at the age of fifty-five.

On the subsequent enlargement, some ten years later, of the Department, competition having failed to secure an adequate number of suitable candidates, the new Director-General, Colonel Robinson, proposed the nomination of candidates, appointments "being given by preference to the sons of those who had done good service to their country in India."

To these the prospects of the Service were duly set forth; but, unfortunately, they were allowed to suppose that the Indian Telegraph Department was in a normal condition, and were not told that they would find above them, in 92 out of the 107 places offered, men nearly on a par with themselves in age, and whose death or retirement they would have to await before they could themselves be promoted. This was indeed keeping the word of promise to the ear, while breaking it to the hope; and we should not have been surprised if the disenchantment had been not only painful to the nominees, but, by leading to half-hearted service, injurious to the interests of the Government. And we regard it as one of the strongest points of the case of the Telegraphists that no disappointment has in any degree affected their devotion to the Service, or the conscientiousness with which they have performed their duty.

Yet their claims were strong, and their position very discouraging. Between 1868 and 1872 seventy-two gentlemen had been thus sent out by nomination. They had been induced to join the Telegraph Department by the offer of appointments on salaries varying from £240 to £3,600 a year; they began to come out to India in 1868, two years after the above appointments had been filled up, no intimation having been afforded them that all the prizes in the Department had already been given away to men who had been previously appointed at exceptionally early ages.

Needless to say, they represented the hardship of occupying a position where, as has turned out to be the case, the organisation of the Department was such that promotion above the initial grade was a demonstrable impossibility. To which may be added, from the representation of these gentlemen, the following, which testifies, incidentally, to the hard work and exposure entailed on the members of the Telegraph Department:—

The seventy-two were the Secretary of State's special nominees who received nominations as possessing decided claims upon the State for consideration. The special consideration that after all these years has been accorded to them is, that the names of two have been added to the list of casualties for every one that has received a permanent step in promotion.

On these grounds the telegraphists claim, not unjustly, some alleviation of their lot, some really "special consideration." They have, in our judgment, fully made out their case. Nor can there be any real difficulty in fairly meeting it. The Department has realised, during the seven financial years ending March 31st, 1884, a net profit of £524,055, or about £75,000 a-year.

They were, in the first instance, told by the Director-General (in 1875) to wait. "A recommendation was conveyed that the memorial should be withdrawn, and that the memorialists should wait ten years before asking for redress." They withdrew the memorial, and have waited the full ten years, liable, on small salaries, "to be moved," as a contemporary justly remarks:—

All over India, from Cape Comorin to Peshawar, or from Quetta to the Burmese Frontier, and in this respect are at a disadvantage, as compared with their compeers. Added to this is the fact that the Department, being an Imperial one, no Local Government is able to champion its interests, and urge the justice of improving the condition of its members. On the other hand, the officers of the Department are so scattered over the face of the country, that it is exceedingly difficult for them to combine to make a powerful joint representation of their grievances. No one can doubt, that if the Department possessed one tithe of the influence or power of organisation which is inherent in a body like the Civil Service, for instance, it would secure a hearing for its case, and a remedy for its wrongs. The very fact that it is, so to say, nobody's child, should induce the Government of India and the Secretary of State to look closely to its interests.

We are glad to see some reason to hope that this is the case, and that the later appointed telegraphists will not have to wait, as would be the case were no steps taken in the matter, for the disappearance, early in the ensuing century, of the last of the nominees of 1866. So, at least, the Pioneer puts it, saying:—

The block created by the appointment of the ninety-two Morse assistants will not disappear till 1902. Again, the appointment of seventy-two officers in 1868-72, when there were really only sixteen vacancies, has created a block which will not cease till 1907.

This is certainly a hopeless prospect indeed, and the outcome of a succession of errors such as can, we hope, be matched in no other Indian Department.

It is, therefore, satisfactory to learn that the Viceroy, while most favourably reviewing, the other day, the year's operations, which have resulted in a surplus revenue of £116,791, expressed a somewhat confident hope that there will not be much longer delay in announcing the steps to be taken for an improvement of the position of many officers of the Department whose prospects are seriously marred under the present organisation.

OBITUARY.

COLONEL R. M. HUGHES.

We regret to record the death of Colonel Marsh Hughes, of the Bombay Army, the well-known Secretary of the Stranger's Home for Asiatics, which occurred, on the 26th ult., at Bourne-mouth, at the age of eighty-two. Well acquainted with the Native languages, and thoroughly conversant with the Native character, he was emphatically the right man in the right place, and many a poor Oriental has cause to bless the day when he came, a destitute foreigner, under the Colonel's kind, yet watchful, supervision. Colonel Hughes joined the Bombay Army in 1819, retiring, after thirty years' service, on the 22nd of December, 1849.

HEADS.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The desire from boyhood to obtain human heads as trophies, as certificates of honour and glory, is the cause of some of the difficulties we experience in opening communications between Upper Assam and Upper Burma. Among some of the Eastern Nagas, until a boy can produce a skull he is not considered a man.

In page 326 of the "Bengal Selection of Papers, 1873," Mr. Peal has pointed out that he had had a smart little fellow working for him for a long time, who explained how he had obtained his honours by murdering a woman for the sake of her skull. He lay in wait for a long time near a spring, and, when a woman came for water, he crept up behind her and chopped her on the head.

The Eastern Nagas will not be civilized until we run a broad Roman road through their country, and make known that all on this high road, including women and children, are under the protection of the Empress Queen; and that all villages near the Queen's road will be made responsible for murders committed on it. There are clans of the Abor tribe very anxious to trade in Assam, and when they can venture into and out of the plains without fear of being murdered, they will readily trade with the Assamese, and their interests will be bound up with ours.

Your obedient servant,
T.

"EVERYONE who has travelled in China," says the Japan Weekly Mail, "must have carried away a deep reverence for the Chinaman's snuff-taking capabilities. Snuff-taking in the Middle Kingdom, when the performer is a man of parts, means shovelling tobacco-dust up the nose much as a skilled nurse pushes pap into the mouth of a baby. It is an awesome spectacle, inevitably suggesting those ropes of black powder which are supposed by pious romancers to entwine themselves among the convolutions of the snuff-taker's brain."

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-800th that of real diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHES.
COLDS.
ASTHMA.
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURERS.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the [20th January; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad to the 27th January.

THE Times correspondent telegraphs from Mandalay, under date 13th, an account of the reception, at that city, of the Viceroy. The account given of the conduct of the members of the Hlootdaw, or Burmese Supreme Court, seems incredible. We reproduce it, remarking only that, if it be but in part true, very heavy blame must rest on those officials, owing to whose neglect Her Majesty's Representative was exposed to so gross an indignity. Nothing could have been devised more calculated to lower him in the opinion of Her Majesty's new subjects:—

The Viceroy arrived at Mandalay at 10 o'clock yesterday. He landed at half-past two under a Royal salute, accompanied by Lady Dufferin, Sir Frederick Roberts, Mr. Bernard, and staff. He was received by General Prendergast, Colonel Sladen, and the chief civil and military authorities, who conducted him to a temporary building erected for his reception and profusely decorated. The Viceroy and Lady Dufferin sat on two chairs or thrones, used on State occasions by Thebaw and Soopayah Lat, which had been brought from the palace. The Viceroy was in morning dress, with the Order of the Star of India. Lady Dufferin wore the Order of the Crown of India. The attendance in the building was not large, and comparatively few Burmese were present either at the landing-stage or in the building.

The members of the Hlootdaw were seated in the building, but took no part in the proceedings. They presented no address and extended no welcome to the Viceroy. The action of the Hlootdaw on the occasion of the Viceroy's arrival was, in the opinion of those best qualified to judge, meant to be openly defiant. They first sought to escape attending by demanding that chairs should be provided for all the members, and that they should wear their shoes. Within the limits of a telegram it is impossible to explain the various questions involved in these demands, or their effect on the minds of the Burmese. The demands of the Hlootdaw were granted. They then attended nearly 100 strong, the usual number of members attending the Hlootdaw being twenty. Petty officers, the subordinates of subordinates, who would not be allowed to remain standing in the presence of a Burmese Woon, attended as members of the Hlootdaw, and attempted to monopolise all the front places and to force the English officers and officials of high rank to remain behind them. This was, however, prevented. Although the Hlootdaw insisted on such rights for themselves, they still exact from Colonel Sladen's assistant, who in many cases acts as his deputy, that when he transacts business with them he must enter their presence shoeless.

THERE seems, too, by the way, to have been a blunder, which can do nought but harm, anent the Annexation Proclamation. For, according to the Rangoon Gazette's Mandalay correspondent, the first issue was recalled, and then another issued with the words, "pending Her Majesty's will and pleasure," which has produced increasing uncertainty amongst the Burmese.

THE Mengoon Prince has, we learn, returned to Pondicherry in a very dejected state, having failed to reach Saigon, or, indeed, to get further than Colombo.

THE Ambassador sent by Thebaw to Europe has returned. When passing Madras he wished to have an interview with his late master, but the authorities refused permission.

It is reported that the health of Mr. Bernard may compel him to take furlough shortly, and that his successor and Chief Commissioner of Lower Burma will be Mr. Frederick Barnes Peacock, now Chief Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

WITH reference to Messrs. Needham and Molesworth's journey to Kima, it seems that the outward journey from Sadiya occupied twenty-two days. Tibet is not barred off in this direction by high snow-clad passes, but the country is very rugged, and the track ascends and descends the mountains which are piled round the ravine of the Brahmapootra. The identity of the river Sanpo with the Irrawaddy is now disproved, also the theory that the river of Zayal is not the Brahmapootra. The Sanpo rises several days' journey north of Kima, and joins another large river rising the other side of the same mountain, and their united waters enter Assam under the name of Dihing.

WE are very gladd to be able to state that Her Majesty has been graciously pleased to forward a donation of £100 to the Countess of Dufferin's fund in support of the National Association for Supplying Female Medical Aid to the Women of India, through Messrs. Coutts and Co., who, at the request of the Countess of Dufferin, are receiving contributions from the United Kingdom.

FOR some time past it has been surmised that the Duke of Connaught would succeed Sir M. Biddulph in the divisional command at Rawalpindi. The Admiralty and Horse Guards' Gazette informs us that the appointment (which will be very popular in India, where both the Duke and the Duchess won golden opinions) has been made, and that H.R.H. is to take over the command in the course of the summer.

THE Native Press continues, unreasonably enough, to connect the (very economically conducted) Burmese expedition with the imposition of the Income tax. Some time since the Jam-e-Jamshed wrote regarding the financial situation:—

It seems strange that the Viceregal Government should have thought fit to impose the Income tax simply for a deficit of sixty-two lakhs. It looks more surprising when we see that a sixth of this amount is to be frittered away on empty military show. This Camp of Exercise could very well have been postponed to a hopeful period. We can never expect the noble Viceroy to pay any attention to the wants and requirements of this country when his whole time will be fully occupied by the Russian advances on one side and the Chinese on the other. We think it is the Viceroy's duty to put the British Cabinet in possession of these facts. It is for this reason that the Native Press of India oppose the annexation of Burma. We may still hope that Lord Dufferin will, during his contemplated visit to that country, satisfy himself that it is best for all parties that Burma be ruled by an independent administrator as a separate colony.

And, returning to the charge, it tells us:—

No Native of India will ever refuse to pay his fair share of any extraordinary burden of expenditure to Government, but he will positively object to his being taxed when Government have more direct means of replenishing the treasury. We do not see any member of the Council suggesting a reimposition of the import duties. Ultimately this money will be paid by India, excepting a very small portion which the Manchester men will have to pay. We do not see why these latter should not contribute something towards the defence of the country from which they draw away so much money annually.

THE Subodha Patrika says:—

That the principle of taxing the well-to-do proportionately to their means must be adhered to. Only three lakhs of people it is said will be subject to the tax, but we all know how zealously the assessors will be tempted and urged to multiply that number to show their own efficiency and swell the amount of the collections. There is one remark in the Viceroy's speech in connection with this measure which requires notice. He is reported to have said that an increase in the Salt tax should be held as a reserve for greater emergencies, but against this reservation we enter our humble protest in the name of that justice which his Lordship invokes in support of the Income Tax and in the name of the unrepresented millions. If any reserve is wanted over and above the income tax, it ought to be drawn from a re-imposition of the import duties and not in an increase of the burden on such a necessary of life and health as salt. If this cannot be done because of powerful Manchester, it is vain to invoke the name of justice in this connection, and the Government ought to retrench expenditure—do anything in fact but increase the duties on salt. We are glad the Bombay Conference has already suggested this point, and we hope our political associations will always speak as with one voice in this matter.

OUR Native brethren continue to plume themselves on, and rather to overrate the importance of, what they somewhat pompously style the National Conference at Bombay. For instance, the Hindoostanee of Lucknow says:—

When the historian of the future sets himself to write the history of the national progress, he will not fail to mention prominently the 28th, 29th, and 30th December, 1885, when the various forces of the country were brought together. We have very often used the word nation. We know what this word means; and we know also that there are many Anglo-Indians who will not believe that there is anything like a nation in India. But if any of these gentlemen had been present at the national conference alluded to above at the Goculdas Tyabjee Sanskrit School, Bombay, he would have been convinced of the existence of something like a nation in India. The assembling of Sindhis, Punjabees, Bengalees, Madrasees, Gujratis, Maharattas, Parsis, Marwaris, Hindus, and Mahomedans under the same roof, and for a common object, is by no means a trifling thing. In fact, a few hours before the meeting took place, the delegates themselves were not quite sure whether the conference would prove a success. Who could believe that the various peoples inhabiting this country, speaking different languages and professing different religions, would be brought together round the same table to discuss their political programme? Who could believe that, through the medium of the English language, the various nationalities inhabiting India, from Ceylon to the Himalayas, would be able to express their thoughts and feelings to each other?

THE Persian newspaper Schems announces that the Russian mission has left Bokhara, after receiving assurances from the Emir that he would do nothing to hinder the construction of the Merv-Bokhara Railway, but would, on the contrary, do his best to assist in that work. The Russians apparently find the new Emir a good deal more squeezable than the late Moozuffer ed-din.

We read in the United Service Gazette that:—

General Annenkoff, who is in charge of the railway which is to connect the Caspian with the Amu-Daria, has just contributed an interesting paper on the subject to the French Geographical Society. The Russian officer describes the railway as a purely military route, and dwells on the fact that the work has been entrusted to army officials. Economy has thus been practised, as "Russia is not rich enough to sacrifice hundreds of millions for a political object." The railway is now open as far as Askabad; but the line to Ghiaours is ready. Between Ghiaours and Merv the railway is also finished, with the exception of the bridges and stations. General Annenkoff adds that the line which is to connect Merv with the Amu-Daria will soon be commenced. He gives a glowing account of the condition of Merv, and says that since that town has become Russian, houses have everywhere sprung up as if by magic, and that it will develop into a beautiful city, with spacious streets and boulevards.

We must allow for a good deal of "liage" in all this, as, indeed, in the utterances of all Russian officials. The last accounts of Merv indicate the need of a good deal of "magic" ere it could be made a "beautiful city."

It appears from a statement which has just been issued that the British authorities have captured the following arms in Upper Burma:—1,519 iron smooth bore guns, 25 iron rifle guns, 162 bronze and brass guns, 41 bronze and brass mortars; total, 1,747. The number of small arms taken is as follows:—Old flintlock muskets, 2,500; common muskets, muzzle-loading, 4,000; Martini-Henry rifles, 220; Martini-Henry carbines, 3; sporting guns, 50; bayonets, 7,500; spears, 4,337; daos, 13,046. A large number of Martini-Henry cartridges, several tons of powder, thousands of small shot and bullets, and many boxes of percussion caps were also seized. So that Thebaw was not wholly destitute of the material means of resistance. Can the sinews of war have been wanting? It is unalter for inquiry what has become of the large amount of treasure with which Thebaw was credited.

It is curious to read in the Calcutta Statesman the naïve confession that Conservatives do more for India than "Liberals." This is exactly what we have always maintained, and we rejoice in our contemporary's conversion:—

On the whole (says the Statesman) we think Indian claims have been treated with more consideration by the Conservatives in office than by the Liberals. We are ourselves, we suppose, very advanced Liberals, but we have observed mere readiness, we think, in the Conservative party to show consideration for India than in the Liberal leaders when questions of the kind have been before Parliament.

In the Indian section of the Society of Arts on Friday evening, February 19th, a paper on "Historical and Recent Famines in India," will be read by F. C. Danvers, F.S.S., Registrar and Superintendent of Records at the India Office. The chair will be taken at eight o'clock by J. M. Maclean, M.P., member of the Council.

Chit Chat.

THE Bombay Municipality are wont to hire every year upwards of 9,000 bullocks for use on the roads. This is as it should be, but what about the condition of the animals. "Miserable, ill-fed, ill-kept, undersized, emaciated, weak-kneed bags of bones are the wretched beasts that toil before the Municipal roller, and leave the Hindu-trodden dirt of the July streets. Only constant torture can extract from them their modicum of daily work, and when they die the vultures would be puzzled to make much of their meagre, leathery corpses." Can this be possible in the Capital of Western India, one of the finest and wealthiest cities of the Empire? Yet the Pioneer is not addicted to romance.

INDIA is a land of adventure even in the prosaic nineteenth century. The ex-Nawab Sadik Hasan, who has just been deprived of his rank and position in Bhopal, was in early life an obscure "attar" seller. Yet he rose to be Consort of the Begum and Minister of her State. He owed all his good luck to a court intrigue. Such is "Qismat."

SIR AUCKLAND COLVIN may well rest happy on his laurels. Dr. Hunter, C.S.I., C.I.E., LL.D., has in the plenitude of his benevolence, condescended to speak, in terms of approbation, of the Financial Minister's Budget. Of course one person could have done better. It might raise a blush were his name to be mentioned, so we refrain.

MISFORTUNE is said to be a fine school to develop the better qualities in the human heart. So it has turned out in the case of Prince Thebaw. When Lord of all the Umbrellas in Burma he passed his time, so it is said, in drinking and executing. Now, when Fortune has deserted him, he never touches liquor of any sort, description, or variety. The remedy for "dipsomania" seems, in his case, to have been alike efficacious and gratifying; but then it is not everyone who has a kingdom to lose as the price of abandoning habits of drink.

A PAMPHLET has been published in India to prove that the fall of the rupee from 2s. to 1s. 6d. is a blessing rather than otherwise. What says "paterfamilias"?

POOR Bombay has oysters, but cannot eat them, as they have an unhappy knack of poisoning the rash "gourmands" who essay to make a meal therewith. But why, nobody knows. Here is a problem for Mr. Grant Duff.

SOME years ago, at the Camp of Exercise at Delhi, an infuriated umpire rushed up, breathless with haste, to point out to a commanding officer the presence at a near distance of a battery of artillery, so he ordered that 400 of the men should at once be withdrawn from the field as hors de combat. "Indeed, sir," was the calm reply of the veteran disciple of Mars, "this has been a truly fierce action. I have already lost 400 men out of 250." The umpire found pressing duties in another direction.

"BETTER late than never." It is gratifying to find that, with tardy steps, Government are making some effort to place Bombay in a state of defence. Two years ago eight 38-ton guns were sent to the Western capital; they are now only being put into their places. "Hurry no man's cattle," seems to have been the motto of the authorities in this matter.

Trop de zèle has been the fault of Mr. Sharp, collector of Maldah, who has been "wiggid" for insisting upon doing the work of his subordinator. "The practice is not for the public advantage," says Sir Rivers Thompson. But is the failing so general as to need a "public censure" when detected?

THE Civil Service of India is having a hard time of it—loss of exchange mulcts them to the tune of 25 per cent. as regards providing for the education of their families; promotion is unusually slow, and now comes the income-tax crushing out the last spark of hope in the official breast.

GOLD, it is said, is "appreciated"—very much so; but the explanation that this means that it will buy more goods than formerly is not the experience of most families.

IDEAS ABOUT INDIA.*

"Haro! Haro! aide moi O mon Roi, on me fait tort!" is the immemorial exclamation of the Channel Island folk when complaining of being wronged. "Koompane ka dohaee!" used to be in India the energetic petition for justice. Mr. Blunt has himself adorned his book with an Oriental version of labour is worship, in the shape of the well-known proverb, "Justice for one hour is better than worship for seventy years." Blessed are they

"Who know what's right, nor only so,
But also practise what they know."

Justice in the only practical sense, justice, not according to abstract principles alone, but justice with equitable reference to things as they are, and to what they may, in any reasonable time, be expected to become, is the very thing which Mr. Blunt has neglected almost from his first page to his last.

Mr. Blunt, while finding fault all round, and while raising, in his capacity of self-constituted advocate of the Indian peoples, the "clameur" for justice, has omitted to show that he knows the meaning of the word.

We think it, as a rule, undesirable to criticise a title-page, though we might plead, as an excuse for so doing, the example of the great Essayist.

Mr. Blunt would have well described his book on India, for "Ideas" it is et preterea nihil, had he but prefixed the word crude. His are, in many respects, truly raw ideas, not only undigested by the author, but utterly incapable of digestion by any one acquainted with the subject of which the author treats.

This Mr. Blunt, who considers himself the saviour of the Hyderabad State (p. xxii.), does not perceive: and it is a pity that he laid bare, as he has done in his Introduction, his ideas of his own importance: hinting, indeed (p. xix.), that it was a serious matter of discussion at the India Office, and in Indian circles, whether so terrible an agitator could, without "danger to the State," proceed to India!

This same Introduction, in which our author advocates, in no obscure language, the repudiation (pp. xvii.-xviii.) of public debts "as an idea of the future for Radical finance: I am convinced it is a sound one," and in which he tells us "that I am well known, and that Anglo-Indian authority carries little weight," gives us a fair idea of the spirit in which he undertook to make "impartial researches." He is animated with a sort of blind admiration of the Natives with whom he came into contact—to do them justice, we must admit that their admiration of him was, as shown by the addresses which Mr. Blunt has been at the trouble to print in the Appendix, at least equally blind—and a dislike for Europeans, official and non-official (the Covenanted Civil Service being his pet aversion), excepting only the late Viceroy, Lord Ripon. He devotes the best part of a chapter to a most sweeping charge of dishonesty against the Calcutta Foreign Office, reprinting it verbatim, though he had before him the protest of "my friend, Sir Alfred Lyall," which he relegates (p. 142) to a footnote.

In fact, he seems to have looked for evidence from one side only. "The best administered districts of the Native States are also the best administered of all India. . . . The only villages I found free from debt in India were in the Nizam's territory!" (pp. 114, 116.) One might be disposed to question such a statement; but we are warned to beware of doing anything of the kind, for we are assured (p. 3), "I became acquainted in a few weeks with what the majority of our civilian officers spend their lives in only half-suspecting."

It is difficult, and it is quite unnecessary, to confute the opinions of anyone so self-sufficient. But it is well to see whether they would, if put into practice, tend. Home rule for India, disruption being (by what force we know not, for Mr. Blunt tells us that the Russians (p. 94) could offer better terms than we could) excluded, is surely foreshadowed by such language as we now quote:—"The Indian populations are possessed with a strong feeling of personal attachment for Her Majesty the Queen, and while they grow yearly more and more estranged from their Anglo-Indian masters, they yearly look with more and more hope to England and to Her who sits upon the English throne. This is a sentiment of the utmost value, and one which may yet prove the salvation of the Indian Empire, in spite of all the Anglo-Indians can do to wreck it. I look to it in the future as the true bond of union which shall retain for us India, not as our inheritance, for it will not be ours to possess, but as a co-heir to our good fortunes. India will not then be lost to England, but will remain to us a far greater glory than now, because it will have become a monument of what we shall have been able to achieve for the benefit of others, not merely for ourselves."

We are not, after this, "surprised to hear" that (p. 47) "the Englishwoman in India has, during the last thirty years, been the cause of half the bitter feelings there between race and race." In our innocence, we had always regarded friendly intercourse between the Mem Sahib and her darker sister as one of the most hopeful means of bringing about greater community of feeling.

So does enlightened Native opinion. For what says its ablest exponent, the Native Thinker? He points out the best method of promoting social intercourse between Europeans and Natives—that is, by first bringing the ladies of the two classes together, strictly excluding the gentlemen, and otherwise keeping the ladies quite at their ease. (But we adduce his opinion with some hesitation, as our author will probably prefer the views of Mr. W. S. Blunt to those of Sir Madhava Rao.)

So, evidently, does Lady Dufferin, who is well known to represent, in this matter, the views of the Queen Empress. It is not only the provision of medical aid, but the promotion of social intercourse, which is to be looked for as an eventual result of Lady Dufferin's excellent fund for the benefit of the women of India. If women were really the bane, it would not be mala praxis to resort in this case to homœopathy, and to let them also be the antidote. Like, we are told, cures like.

Does Mr. Blunt mean to extrude English ladies, and to go back to the times of the renowned Major of the last century, whose sixteen dusky beauties caused him no domestic troubles; "for," quoth he, "I only have to give 'em a little rice, and let 'em run about." If not, what does he mean?

Some of the Indian papers have been not undeservedly severe on Mr. Blunt for his reference to his stay at the house of a station-master in India, whose hospitality he enjoyed, whose buggy he adorned, and whose wife he mentions with scant respect, if not with an actual sneer, under the name of "his lady"; besides giving it to be understood that his host ought not to have been able to live in such a house, or in such a style. To say nothing of the good feeling evidenced by such remarks, let us put the matter in a light which does not seem to have struck the ungrateful guest. Let us for a moment assume—we hope that the assumption is not uncharitable—that Mr. Blunt's abilities, had he been unaided by social position, would have secured him in England a place with a salary equal to that of an average station-master. Would he have been prepared to perform the same duties on the same salary in India? Is the increased pay, with the consequent buggy, an adequate compensation for exile? Mr. Blunt was glad to use the buggy, and not above sneering at the fair driver. Yet in olden days a "squire" was synonymous with nobility of sentiment and dignity of action.

We regard this book as being, in many respects, most mischievous. Being written in an ad captandum style, it has been freely quoted by some of the London dailies, whose citations have been duly reproduced by country papers, thus helping to imbue the ignorant with the idea that we are in India little better than vampires. Some of this stuff we were disgusted to see quoted, the other day, in an East Kent journal (assuredly not the only provincial paper in which it has been reproduced) to the effect that (p. 51) no hotel-keeper dare admit a Native for fear of losing the more lucrative patronage of his European customers, "that no Native gentleman," whatever his rank, age, or character may be, can visit a place of public resort, frequented by Englishmen, especially if he be in Native dress, without a certain risk of insult and rough treatment. Railway travelling is notoriously dangerous for them in this respect," &c.

The cause of progress in India, and of the gradual approximation of the two races, has, we think, no worse enemy than one who, like Mr. Blunt, prates to the Natives of their real or fancied wrongs. We have repeatedly expressed our earnest wish to see the European and Native races brought into closer contact; and, in this respect, no one can more warmly sympathise than we do with Mr. Blunt's desires. But the way to realise his wish is, we cannot but think, to level up, not to level down. The truer policy would, surely, be not to hold up the more advanced race to execration, while leaving the less advanced in a state of semivolent self-satisfaction (the listless languor of the land of the lotus, to quote a phrase which has now become historic), but rather to point to British civilisation as an object of honourable emulation, as an evidence of what has been achieved by Europeans, and as a harbinger of what may be done by Indians, in the path of progress. This would, we think, be the course pursued by any enlightened well-wisher to both England and India.

ITALY AND HER INVADERS.*

In the vast plains between the Baltic and the Euxine, which form the Lithuania and Southern Russia of modern history, there dwelt in the third century after Christ a mighty nation known as the Ostrogoths. The head of this powerful but loosely compacted state was "Hermanric," the "Amal," sprung from the seed of Gods, still true to the martial religion of Odin and Thor; a Goth of Goths, and a Teuton of Teutons. But warriors as were these barbarians, they were destined to bow the knee to the Huns, a dwarfish race, who swept down upon their adversaries over the shallows of the sea of Azof, and spread disaster and ruin far and wide through the Ostrogothic kingdom. Crushed, defeated, and humiliated, the Goths were none the less able to retain their nationality, and bide their time till the Goddess Fortune should once again smile on them, and send success to their arms. Thus elapsed a century, when in the year 454 a stripling was born, destined not only to re-establish the monarchy of his ancestors, but to found an Empire, which for upwards of one hundred years kept at bay all the armies of Imperial Rome, then the Mistress of Italy, and indeed the head of the whole civilised world.

Born in the Pannonian highlands, the lad, inspired with the great deeds of his "Amal" forefathers, and moved with the recollection of the heroism of his ancestors, conceived the notion of restoring to his nation the proud possessions which once belonged to the mighty Ostrogothic family. Success favoured his arms, and he even aspired to descend the Alps into Italy, and found an Empire on the Hesperian shore. At this time the Roman dominions beyond the Peninsula were swayed by a celebrated soldier of fortune named Odovacar, who for thirteen years held undisputed sway in the Imperial ranks; he extended the boundaries of the Emperor far north of the Alps, Dalmatia fell before his victorious arms, Sicily opened her gates to his conquering bands, while, towards the close of the fifth century Sardinia and Corsica were fain to own allegiance to the sway of Byzantium. And now came the death-grapple between the stripling warrior of the Goths and the mighty hero who had overrun the fair lands of Central Europe, and in whose wake a stream of conquest flowed in almost perennial freshness; the struggle was fierce, and blood ran like water in the streets of the various towns in which the battles centred. Quarter was neither given nor asked, but in the end victory inclined to the Ostrogoth, and on 5th March, 403, their leader rode through the gates of Ravenna, and took possession of the city for thirty-three years was to be his home and his capital. History would have been glad to have recorded that the young king showed generosity to his fallen foe, but it was otherwise, for inviting Odovacar to a banquet his rival claved the fallen general from the collar-bone to his loins. "I think the wretch had never a bone in his body," was the brutal exclamation of the exultant victor.

Italy had now but one master, the son of Theudemir, the all-powerful warrior Theodoric the Great, a character which stands forth on the page of time prominent as one of those illustrious minds, those great characters, which rise up at intervals in the world's history towering above the ordinary intellects of the day—landmarks, as it were, in annals of this earthly sphere.

For more than thirty years Theodoric ruled with undisputed sway, dispensing justice and consolidating the Gothic Empire; but at length, on 30th August, 526, this "most unconquered prince" paid the debt of nature, if not peaceably—for he had troubles towards the close of his reign, and his conscience was loaded with a guilt of murder and the pangs of remorse—at least naturally. No assassin's hand struck down the founder of the Ostrogothic kingdom; he died unharmed—he was buried unscathed.

It is evident that such a powerful federation on the outskirts of the Roman Empire could not be otherwise than a standing menace to the Byzantine Government, and it will not occasion surprise that when Justinian assumed the Imperial purple, he found himself under the necessity of taking measures to reduce the Goths to obedience. The instrument selected to carry out this purpose was Belisarius, "a man of infinite resource and patience, as well as courage, and certainly one of the greatest strategists the world has ever seen." Such is Mr. Hodgkin's description of this illustrious general, a description which his deeds and victories in Italy certainly justify and confirm. To follow the Roman chieftain in his campaign is impossible—a mere recital of his battles would fill a large space. It must suffice to state that in the end he drove the Goths from their principal towns. Naples, Ravenna, Carthage, Sicily, and Imperial Rome itself all opened their gates to the unconquered conqueror, and finally in the year 540, Belisarius returned in triumph to Constantinople, adored by his countrymen, and feared by his enemies. His cup of happiness was full, but the infidelity of his wife, and the palace intrigues of the Empress—the quondam actress, then the all-powerful Theodora—soon dashed the chalice from his lips, and he dragged on his existence a shattered, broken-hearted child of Fortune.

The withdrawal of the master-mind was the opportunity for the Goths, who under the well-known and much-dreaded Totila soon began to recover their influence and extend their possessions. Once again did Imperial Rome pass away from its Byzantine Emperor, once again did the flag of the Ostrogoths float over the ramparts of Ravenna—and once again did the hapless occupant of the throne of the Cæsars summon the discarded Belisarius, and implore his assistance in ridding Italy of her hated invaders. The warrior accepted the commission; but ill supported at home and lacking the sinews of war, alike as regards men and money, he could not make much headway against his valiant foes, and it was reserved for Nasres the eunuch, a man bred up in the luxuries of Court, to crush and ultimately exterminate the hordes of Totila, who on the death of their chief in 552 roved a hapless incoherent band, leaderless, hopeless, and filled with despair, making "their way sadly over the Alpine passes, bidding an eternal farewell to the fair land of their birth."

Such is, in outline, the tale which Mr. Hodgkin has presented to the public in the two massive volumes which he has recently published. How he has acquitted himself of his task need scarce be said. Thoughtful, painstaking to a degree unusual even in a painstaking age of literature—sceptical in his conclusions and unbiassed in his judgment, the interwoven fabric of falsity and truth, rumour and fact, could not have been more skillfully reared, or more harmoniously shaped. That such students of history should devote their lives to the elucidation of the many intricate problems which perplex and puzzle mankind is alike creditable to the author who writes, as advantageous to the public which reads. Nor would it be right to omit a word of praise to the Clarendon Press, which has borne the brunt of an expense scarcely likely to be recouped by the sale of a work; too remote in its interest to appeal to the sympathies of the oi polloi of a busy, thoughtless, indifferent age. We avow with readiness that we have read Mr. Hodgkin's work with pleasure and profit, and we would say to others, "Go thou and do likewise."

THE LIVES OF ROBERT AND MARY MOFFAT.*

Nothing brings more forcibly to the mind the early days of Christianity, when our Lord's chosen associates were fishermen, and when the Apostle of the Gentiles was Himself a tent-maker, than the life of the missionary. He has always been, in all senses of the word, a "working man," with hands as well as with brains; constantly enduring the mental strain, harder than any mere manual labour, of meeting the most diverse arguments, of refuting the most contradictory objections, of being all things to all men, that he may by all means win some. In some countries he meets with intellects as keen as his own, and not less ready to defend their own doctrines, however erroneous, than he is to attack them; in others, with tribes to whom the bare idea of a God is absolutely unknown, and in whose language it cannot be expressed; in others, with races to whom the idea of a Supreme Power is simply that which represents a demoniac influence to be propitiated by sacrifices of what is most easily obtainable—human life. Pioneer alike of Christianity and of civilisation, he has to encounter the combined forces of a bigoted priesthood, jealous of its power, and of a more or less absolute barbarism which resents interference with the established customs of the race which it holds in bondage.

That a Scotch gardener should have been able, without previous training, to face and to overcome these difficulties, to conciliate Natives of every South African tribe with whom he came into contact, and to master their languages so far as to be able to translate into the leading dialect—the Setchwana—the entire Scriptures, the Pilgrim's Progress, and many metrical effusions of a religious character, shows, were the proof needed, that Robert Moffat was no ordinary man.

Attaching himself early in life to the Wesleyan connexion, he in 1809, reached South Africa, destined to be the scene of his labours for no less a period than sixty-three years. For more than ten years he worked, uncheered, except at rare intervals, by any society but that of his converts, until, in 1819, he had the happiness of welcoming as his bride, at Cape Town, the Mary Smith to whom he, after long hesitation on the part of her parents, had for some time been betrothed. Both had been brought up in the strictest tenets of what used to be called the Evangelical School of theology; and, though "rubbing shoulders" with others may have, in a degree, softened its asperities in Moffat, the letters of his wife indicate that, though nominally a member of the Church of England, she never entirely shook off the tendencies acquired in youth.

The usual difficulties which occur to all thoughtful persons, as to their religious state, seem to have been surmounted, early in life, by Moffat, and are thoroughly well described by himself at p. 13. Thenceforth his convictions were settled, and his path in life made clear to him.

The Society for whom he was working seems, from the narrative, to have transferred him, with more frequency than was perhaps altogether desirable, from one sphere of duty to another. But the languages of the various tribes appear, on the whole, to be cognate, though this circumstance by no means prevents them from indulging in internecine war of the most ferocious character. On one occasion, and on one only, Moffat was exposed to the necessity of taking part in an inter-tribal battle; that between the invading Mantates and the Griquas. On this occasion he seems to have comported himself "like a Briton," and saved the Mission. But what follows is appalling. The other side being beaten, "It appears," writes Mrs. Moffat, "that the vanquished are (sic) fled in three directions. . . . His (the King's) people find them scattered in straggling parties, and kill them wherever they get them. . . . The unhappy people had left behind them two women and a man, who were feeding on the body of a dead companion. They were stamping on the bones to suck out the marrow."

The burial of women, sometimes but half dead, under the name of Sumadh, is, or was, a by no means uncommon custom in India. Nor was female infanticide. But we do not remember to have met with anything resembling the scene depicted in the following extract:—The Bushmen "were digging a grave for one of their number, a woman, who had died, leaving two children. Finding that it was the intention of the party to bury not only the body of the woman, but the two children also, the Missionary (Moffat) begged for them, and, as the only object was to get rid of them, his petition was readily granted."

Moffat's exceptional influence over the Natives was doubtless due to the absolute justice which was a marked feature in his character, and which seemed to the Natives little less than supernatural. The sentiment was confirmed by a commanding presence, and, too, by the penetrating character of his eyes, which no one who had seen them would readily forget. Of this an amusing instance is given at p. 150, in which a man, having stolen some cattle, and being summoned to the presence of the masterful missionary, "reluctantly drew near, with his hat drawn down over his eyes." . . . On restoring the cattle, he said, to Moffat, "There are the things of your people. Will Mynheer not shake hands with me for once?" "Of course I will, but let me see your face." "That I will not indeed; I do not want to die yet. I can see your face through my hat." "And away," we read, "he went, glad to turn without having met those terrible eyes which aroused an accusing conscience within."

Moffat's magnum opus was the translation of the Scriptures into Setchwana, to superintend the printing of which he had to visit England, and which he did not complete till 1857, parts of the work having, meanwhile, from time to time been published. The Pilgrim's Progress, too (translation completed in 1848), was a task of no ordinary difficulty.

How bravely, and in what dangers and difficulties, Mary Moffat assisted her husband in his labours, is known to all who have followed with interest the course of missionary enterprise, and her admirable firmness of character forms a topic well brought out in this book. The details of missionary life afford but few matters for comment, and on these we do not propose to dwell. A son may well be pardoned if he quotes, at somewhat needless length, the correspondence of his parents, which Mr. Moffat has certainly done. And we think that the book would have been none the less acceptable had it been less flavoured with the "Argot" peculiar to one somewhat narrow school of religious thought.

WHITE HEATHER.*

The characters in this book are not too numerous, and are plainly and clearly drawn. Hodson, a wealthy American, feels himself impelled by the love of Salmo Salar, to try his hand in the waters of Scotland, where, imitating (on a smaller scale, however, Mr. Winans) he eventually becomes proprietor of a considerable estate. On his arrival he meets, in the person of the "keeper," an unusually intelligent and well-informed man, Ronald Strong by name, whose great failing is an unconquerable propensity to make rhymes, good, bad, and indifferent. To this man Hodson takes a great liking; and wishing to raise him, sends him to prepare, at Glasgow, for an examination in forestry.

But Ronald's merits had not been noticed by Hodson only. The daughter of the local doctor, Miss Douglas (to her intimate Meenie), has fallen head-over-ears in love with him. While in the second city of the United Kingdom Ronald had, owing to the enticements of his widowed cousin, Kate Menzies, who keeps a whisky store, got into evil ways, in fact, he was "going to the dogs." The description of the manner in which his sweetheart reminds him of the purity of his home by sending him the sprig of "White Heather," from which the story takes its name, is, to our mind, one of the most telling passages of the book. Her marriage to him—at first a secret one—follows, as a matter of course.

Hodson's daughter, Carry, who, under Ronald's tuition, had emulated her father in the piscatorial art, having an inkling of some of his proceedings in Glasgow, though not of his marriage, meanwhile had, while on a sick bed, implored her father to do something for him; a something which came in the form of an appointment of £400 a-year as manager of Hodson's newly-purchased property.

What became of Mr. Hodson, and (a far more important matter) of Carry, we do not intend to reveal. Readers will be amply rewarded if they work out the problem for themselves.

We do not think this by any means the best of Mr. Black's novels. It seems to us to lack the genial freshness of "Madcap Violet," and much of that power of delineating character which some years since made the "Daughter of Heth," with those inimitable characters, Coquette and Whaup, the book of the season. Every literary man is bound, now and again, to "surpass himself." If Mr. Black has not, on the present occasion, done this, he has, at all events, produced a work of much interest, and which few but himself could have written.

We have received from Mr. H. C. Burdett, the Secretary of the Share and Loan Department of the Stock-Exchange, the sheets relating to Indian Finance and Indian Railways, which form an important part of his "Official Intelligence for the present year."

"White Heather," a Novel. By William Black. London: Macmillan and Co. 1885.

These contain, in the clearest form, all desirable details; and, on the present occasion, a carefully digested Paper on Mr. Cohen's well-known scheme already noticed by us (ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, 1885, p. 736) for forming into one Indian Government Railway Stock the whole of the existing capital invested in Indian Railways.

TRAVANCORE.

TRAVANCORE, or, to give it its name in an uncorrupted form, Tiruvankoda, the Maharajah of which State, known as being in all respects a model Native ruler, died not long since, has many claims to notice. So far back as 1786 it was our ally in the war against Tippoo Sultan, and it enjoys the distinction of being nearly the only State in India which has never turned against us.

Travancore is in many respects a remarkable country; and certainly one of the most picturesque portions of Southern India. The hills—we may almost call them mountains, as in some places they rise to a height of 8,000 feet—are a southerly continuation of the long chain so well known to all visitors to Bombay as the Ghats, and are separated from the sea by a well-watered plain of some ten miles in breadth. It is curious that, notwithstanding the great attractions in the way of sport offered by the hilly regions of the little State, there should still be some portions of them which are all but entirely unexplored. This is doubtless, in a measure, due to their inaccessibility, probably, too, to the malarious character of the valleys; by which the whole hilly tract is intersected, and which have thus far remained unsurveyed. The rapid increase which is taking place in the culture of coffee, introduced some twenty years ago by the British Resident, General Cullen, will doubtless, in course of time, tend to cause a corresponding augmentation in the value of land, and these primeval solitudes will gradually cease to be the unknown tracts which, up to the present time, they have remained.

Perhaps the most remarkable of the natural features of Travancore is the long line of what is known as back water, extending with scarcely a break for a distance of nearly 200 miles, and separated from the sea by a narrow barrier of land varying from half a mile to seven miles in width. These backwaters are formed by the rivers, the floods of which, arrested by the peculiar action of the Arabian Sea on the coast, spread themselves out into these lakes or lagoons, connected here and there by artificial canals, and forming an inland line of smooth water communication which extends nearly the whole length of the coast, and is of the utmost value when the sea itself is closed to navigation during the monsoon. So important is this means of communication that it has practically superseded the necessity for constructing roads. "Every kind of merchandise, and the whole produce of the country are," we read, "carried on these waters, and in consequence few good carriage roads exist."

The enlightened rule of the late Maharajah has tended to the rapid improvement of the country, which stands very high among Native States in almost every respect; no less than six per cent. of the population being able to read and write; while the State is free from debt, and has an adequate surplus of revenue over expenditure.

The rules, known as the Marumakkatayam law, which govern the succession to the throne, are too anomalous not to be mentioned. The succession to the Guddee as to private property "follows the line of sisters, and children by the sisters: a man without a sister is without a legal heir, and must adopt a sister to perpetuate the family."

On the death of a Rajah, the sovereignty passes, not to his sons, who can in no case inherit, but to his uterine brothers, if he have any. Failing these, or on their demise, it passes to his sister's sons, or to his sisters' daughters' sons, and so on. Thus every failure in the direct female descent necessitates the adoption of two or more females. Those adopted into the Royal family are chosen from among its near relatives, and are, when selected, called Tumbratees, or from the place where they reside, Ranees of Attinga. Such a selection has been necessary on two occasions since our connection with Travancore.

The very rapid increase in the population is one among many proofs of the prosperity secured to Travancore by the continuous mild and enlightened rule, which have made it a model Native State. Indeed, it has enjoyed great and exceptional advantages. Of the three great Native administrators, the late Sir Salar Jung, Sir Dinkur Rao, and Sir Madhava Rao, who have in the last few decades afforded abundant proof that Native Statesmanship has, under British suzerainty, lost nothing of its traditional ability and fertility of resource, it has been the good fortune of Travancore to have produced the last-named, and, while receiving from him his earliest public services, to have afforded him his earliest opportunities of distinction. Steadily supported by an enlightened Chief, Sir Madhava Rao was able, before entering on a wider sphere of duty, to regulate the administration in such a manner as to ensure the continued development to the best advantage of his country's resources, and to render comparatively easy the task of the present Maharajah, and of his excellent Dewan, A. Sheshia Sastri, C.S.I.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Pioneer professes to have discovered the modus operandi adopted by Mr. Cumberland, the "thought-reader." It is this. Throwing the thinker off his guard by moving the subject's hand somewhat violently, the latter resents by a slight automatic resistance its deflection from the object which the "conjurer"—for such he really is—is to discover concealed in the room. Of course, even supposing the explanation to be the true one, it would need much practice and consummate skill to interpret such unknown "hieroglyphics" as the beatings of a misdirected pulse. The explanation does not seem to explain much, unless it is made clear how Mr. Cumberland reads the "automatic resistance." Moreover, what becomes of the discovery when the tell-tale hand has to reveal, not a locality, but a thought in the brain? The entertainment is said to be most amusing, and after all it does not matter how the professor outwits his audience. "Nothing succeeds like success."

DIRECT TAXATION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—An Income Tax is now being levied in India on the rich, but the question is, "Can a direct tax be raised from the poor in place of the salt tax?"

The tax on salt is causing great inconvenience to trade, to agriculture, and to manufactures. Fish cannot be cured without salt, and enormous supplies of fresh-water fish are waiting to be caught in our new province of Upper Burma. It is said that good pipes for drainage and for water supply cannot be made without salt, so Government has remitted the tax on the salt supplied to Messrs. Burn and Co., of Calcutta. The Viceroy and his Council have now offered a reward of Rs. 5,000 to any one who will invent a salt mixture so nauseous as to prevent any human being from eating it.

Every one ought to know that if the salt tax were abolished, an enormous increase in the salt trade would immediately take place. Parts of Cheshire would be undermined in order to send its salt to India—manufactures would be greatly stimulated and agriculture improved, and the dividends to the shareholders of our Railways increased.

It is for our financiers to calculate how much a tax of one rupee per annum on each able-bodied man above twenty years of age would produce. All females and all Sepoys in our Army should be exempted.

Free salt would cause our cattle to multiply and get fat. Their increased value would increase the national wealth, and the quality of milk would be improved all over India.

Your obedient servant,
 T.

OBITUARY.

MR. EDWARD THOMAS, F.R.S.

The death of Mr. Edward Thomas, which occurred on the 10th inst., at the age of seventy-three, deprives this country of, perhaps, her foremost numismatist, "and," adds the Times, "the man who had most made numismatics the handmaiden of history." Born in 1813, he joined the Bengal Civil Service in 1832, and after some years' work in Kumaon, was placed by Dalhousie in the Punjab Commission, in which he so distinguished himself, that he was offered the Foreign Secretaryship in succession to Sir Henry Elliot. This offer ill-health compelled him to decline, and to visit England, whence he returned to India, only to qualify for a pension, doing so as Judge of Delhi and of Saugor.

With his retirement from the service Mr. Thomas devoted himself with renewed zeal to the study of the antiquities and history of India and Asia generally, which gained for him a high reputation as a savant on the Continent, as well as the most unequalled recognition at home. In 1873 he was elected a Corresponding Member of the French Institute, and several years later he received a similar honour at the hands of the St. Petersburg Academy; but the Fellowship of the Royal Society, which his father had also held, represented the most valued prize and reward of his labours. The Companionship of the Order of the Indian Empire was conferred upon him nearly two years ago, the tardy official recognition of the great obligations under which Indian knowledge lay to him. Mr. Thomas's writings were very numerous, and many of them are still only to be found scattered throughout the journals of different learned societies, to which he had contributed for upwards of 40 years. The first, and in some respects the most important, of his works was his edition of James Prinsep's "Antiquities," which appeared in two volumes in 1858. His "Ancient Indian Weights," which forms an introductory essay of the "Numismata Orientalia"—of which he was the founder—is the standard authority on the subject, and is never likely to be superseded. He was also joint editor of Sir Henry Elliot's posthumous "History of India."

COLONEL GEORGE THOMSON, C.B., BENGAL ENGINEERS.

We read in the Times that Colonel George Thomson, C.B., late of the Bengal Engineers, who died on Thursday, at his residence in Leeson-park, Dublin, was a son of the late Mr. George Thomson, of Fairly, Aberdeenshire. He was born in 1799, and was educated at Addiscombe College. He entered the Bengal Army in 1815, and retired with the rank of colonel in 1841. The gallant officer was Commanding Engineer of the South-Eastern Division of the Army for the invasion of Burma in 1824-5, and was afterwards employed as Chief Engineer of the Army of the Indus, and was present at the capture of Ghuznee. Colonel Thomson was a magistrate for Aberdeenshire, a Knight of the Dorian Order, and was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath in 1839.

Irony of fate! Present at the capture of Ghuznee! We should think so! Is it quite forgotten that Thomson was the man who, with but three helpers, piled up 300 pounds of powder outside the Cabul gate of the fortress and blew it in? But for which deed there might never have been a barony of Keane at all. Without saying that—we may truly aver that it has rarely been equalled.

"Such a gallant deed of arms

Here is the account of it by Kaye ("Afghan War," vol. i., p. 446), admittedly the first authority on the subject:—"Captain Thomson, of the Bengal Engineers, directed the movements of the explosion party, and with him were his two subalterns, Durand and Macleod, and Captain Peat, of the Bombay Corps. While the Afghans were anticipating an escalade and manning their walls, the British Engineers were quietly piling their powder-bags at the Cabul gate. The work was done rapidly and well."

MAJOR-GENERAL PRIOR, MADRAS ARMY.

The death has been reported from Dinan, France, on the 3rd inst., of Major-General Prior, formerly of the 33rd Madras N.I., and late in civil employment at Hyderabad. Major General Prior was present when the Native troops mutinied at Saugor in June, 1857, and served during the defence of the Saugor Fort under Brigadier Saye, being severely wounded by a musket ball. He was engaged with the rebels when they came to plunder the Saugor cantonments in July, 1857, and was again severely wounded in an action at Narraiwlee on Sept. 18, 1857.

FANCY the Hindoo community at Mirzapore classing a "few England returned Sahibs" with "other outcasts," who had been improperly invited to a certain religious festival! Of course the words were used in a "Pickwickian" sense; none the less the whole thing sounds funny.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the 5th February; from Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad to the 3rd February.

THE Times Correspondent at Mandalay reports that Lord Dufferin has, for political reasons, considered it advisable to occupy the Royal Palace. He was to leave Mandalay on the 18th or 20th. It had been hoped that he would probably issue, before his departure, a proclamation terminating the present provisional state of affairs, though this has not yet been done. The Hlootdaw's action is stated to be aimed solely at embarrassing the Government. It has been decided that the troops shall receive batta instead of the property captured at the palace at Mandalay. A subsequent telegram reports the Viceroy's arrival at Thayetmyo on the 21st.

FROM Calcutta we learn, on the authority of the same journal, that the depreciation of silver continues to engage the earnest attention of the Government. "It is understood," we are told, "that the aim of the Indian Government is bi-metallism, although it has no wish to lay down any absolute rules as to the ratio that the two metals should bear to each other under the scheme of bi-metallism, or as to other details. What it wishes recognised is, the need, not for India only, but for Europe, of rehabilitating silver, and taking immediate steps for that object. Notwithstanding rumours to the contrary, there is good reason to believe that discontinuance of coinage has not entered its plans."

A NUMBER of petty engagements with dacoits are reported from the Pagan district. The civil officer in charge of the Pagan district announces that the country is quieting down and that the revenue is coming in.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST proceeds to Rangoon and remains there. General White retains the command at Mandalay, and will direct the military operations in Upper Burma. Colonel Norman remains at Bhamo.

A STRONG column leaves immediately for the Shan country. It will be camped in the Nataik Pass, the chief route between Burma and the Shan country, and a road through the pass is to be made.

THE insanitary state of Calcutta, to which we recently invited attention, has formed the subject of representation to the Lieutenant-Governor by a memorial from every class and condition, from the Chief Justice, Bishop, and Roman Catholic Archbishop, downwards; it is to be hoped that no time will be lost in dealing with this important subject.

THE prospects of the coming wheat harvest in the North-Western and Central Provinces are stated to be exceptionally favourable. Reports from the other Provinces are also good, and as there is also a general promise of a favourable harvest of rice and other food grains, it is likely that a large quantity of wheat will be available for exportation, and that the season will be highly prosperous.

THE formal handing over of Gwalior to Scindia will take place about the 20th of March, and will be made the occasion of a military pageant, in which the Agra garrison will take part.

AN important addition to the Indian railway system was made last week, when the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal formally opened the Dacca-Mymensingh line.

This railway will open up several districts of Eastern Bengal, and eventually form part of the line to Assam.

It is expected that the Budget will be issued about the 19th of March. The Viceroy will leave Calcutta soon after that date on his way to Simla. He will visit the Punjab and possibly go to Jummoo, to take part in the installation of the Maharajah of Cashmere, which is fixed for April.

SIR W. C. PETHERAM, Chief Justice of the North-West Provinces, has been appointed Chief Justice of Bengal, in the room of Sir Richard Garth, who is about to retire.

THE last section of the Bolan Railway is now approaching completion. The earthwork from Durwaza to Quetta and thence to Gurkhai is finished, and the work is now concentrated on the line from Boston Junction to Sayid Hamid, where a new intrenched camp is to be made. It is stated that a good line for a permanent railway up the Bolan pass has been found, and a detailed survey is being made.

THE return to the India Office of Lord Kimberley will hardly be hailed with much enthusiasm in India. It excites, on the part of the United Service Gazette, some apprehension lest the delay in reorganising the Indian Army on the basis of the recommendations made by Sir Ashley Eden's committee should be prolonged by a Secretary of State who had shown much disinclination to deal with the subject, especially as regards "the separation of local armies from local Governments." Lord Kimberley's last despatch on the subject, written two years after the receipt of that to which it was a reply, and dated July, 1883, is certainly not encouraging. Lord Kimberley's despatch in answer we reproduce verbatim:—

"I have not failed to read your lordship's remarks with attention, but as the questions raised have been already very fully discussed, and I have conveyed to you the decision of Her Majesty's Government upon them, there will, I think, be no advantage in prolonging the discussion by an examination of the arguments in your present letter."

Could (says our contemporary) anything more distinctively offensive have been penned to an official holding the position of Viceroy?

ALL the foreign officers at the Camp of Exercise in India noticed the weak point of our Native Army—the small number of officers appointed to each regiment, and they are said to have spoken very strongly on this point. As the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Frederick Roberts, is of the same opinion, it is to be hoped that something will at last be done to remedy this state of affairs.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—The sales of Government drafts upon India last week have been larger than usual, having amounted to close upon 60 lacs. On the morning of the official allotment, news was received from the States to the effect that the House Coinage Committee had declared against an extension of the operation of the Bland Act. Exchange advices from the East, however, came exceptionally strong, due, apparently, to an increase of activity in the Indian markets, where business is reported to have been kept back of late. The Council consequently placed the whole of the 40 lacs offered, besides more than 13 lacs of transfers and special sales. The minimum price of the allotment, viz., 1s. 6d., which was also the highest at which tenders were made, shows an advance of  $\frac{1}{2}$ d. on the minimum of the two previous allotments. Special sales were subsequently made of bills at 1s. 6 1-32d., and of transfers at 1s. 6 1-16d. per rupee. The amounts disposed of and rates obtained at this week's official allotment of India Council remittances were as follows:—

	Council Bills.
	Rs.	Average.		Minimum.
Calcutta	21,06,000	1s. 6d.	1s. 6d.	22 per cent.
Bombay	18,61,000	1s. 6d.	1s. 6d.	22 per cent.
Madras	33,000	1s. 6d.	1s. 6d.	22 per cent.

This week 40 lacs of Council Bills will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to February 16th inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.10,48,94,569, realising £8,010,909. To the corresponding date last year Rs.13,73,78,018, realising £11,115,163, had been disposed of.

THE Società Bellini of Catania has elected as honorary members of the Society the well-known pianoforte manufacturers, Mr. John Brinsmead and Mr. Edgar Brinsmead, of London.

The following extract from a letter received by the Pioneer from a correspondent in Burma will no doubt interest our readers:—

The Chinese and Natives of India are delighted and look forward to a good time all round. For my own part, I am sure the right thing has been done. I do not believe that we shall see any very sudden increase of trade and prosperity, but that after time is allowed for the country to settle down, say in a year or two, we shall see a general revival of confidence, and a steady growth of trade which will make Burma the most prosperous Province in India. A rich and fertile country like this, under a firm and just rule, will be sure to attract population from abroad, and what is now most needed here is plenty of hands to draw from the soil the riches which it contains. My own idea is that, besides the natural increase of the existing population, we shall see a large immigration of Chinese, not only overland from Yunan, but also by sea from Quangtung and Fokien. We have already numbers of people established in Lower Burma from the latter Provinces, and they will assuredly induce their friends in China to follow in their footsteps. The Chinese and Burmese being cognate peoples, intermarry freely, with the happiest results for the Burmese women who take Chinese husbands. The children of such unions habitually speak and read and write Burmese, so the result may be the absorption of the Burmese race by the Chinese, but the maintenance of the Burmese language and literature in the land. I often meet with Chinese born in Burma who cannot speak Chinese to any extent, and who have no idea of Chinese literature, but are quite at home in the Burmese language and writing.

OUR Native contemporaries continue to "hammer away" at the reimposition of the import duties. We think that they are in the right, but fear that Manchester will be too strong for them. The Dnyan Prakash says:—

Our contemporary of the Times of India in an excellent leader supports the view taken by the Rao Sahib Mandlik. We are certain that no Indian Government will ever make bold to reimpose the import duties and to incur the displeasure of Manchester. But that is no reason why we should not agitate for the reimposition of the duties in question. "But if that astute leader, the Rao Sahib," remarks our contemporary, "is really able to arouse all the Native associations to speech and action, the agitation may possibly assume larger proportions than are expected." All political economists are agreed as to the desirability of levying import duties for the sake of revenue if not for protection, and we fail to see why the Indian Government should hesitate to adopt this line of conduct in a financial emergency and crisis like the present. Indirect taxes should be always safely trusted as good agents in revenue matters in a country like India, and we cannot but come to the conclusion that the import duties are not levied simply with a view to avoid the danger of injuring the vested interests of Manchester.

THE Hindu remarks:—

On the desirability of reimposing these duties there is singular unanimity between the Native community and non-official Europeans. The latter advocate it because it would save them from the income-tax, while the former believe that the condition of the country is such that it cannot forego such a fruitful source of revenue. But it is a question on which there may be difference of opinion, whether if the choice lies between the two means of additional revenue, the reimposition of the import duties or an income-tax is to be preferred. For our part we have never shared in the sentimental objection to all direct taxation in India. The former unpopularity of the income-tax is, in our humble opinion, more or less a fiction so far as the Natives were concerned; and even now we have a firm belief that under careful management the income-tax will work smoothly. Mr. Hope's speech throws valuable light on the general question of the suitability of direct taxation in India.

The Sadharani says:—

The fear of the Income-tax is a kind of prejudice. When it was first introduced the Native assessors oppressed the people, and from that time it became an impression in the public mind that the tax was oppressive. But taxes must be paid, and we think that the Income-tax is somewhat better than other taxes. Many advised the Government to raise the salt tax, but they were not listened to. For this we bless Lord Dufferin and Sir Auckland Colvin on behalf of 200 millions of Indian people.

The Dakka Prokash says:—

The Government is not willing to raise the salt tax, and to this we agree. Lord Dufferin cannot raise the import duties, as the Secretary of State will not sanction it. But we can meet the present deficit with one-fourth of the import duties which Lord Lytton and Lord Ripon abolished. The Governor-General is not a slave of the Secretary of State, or of the Manchester merchants. He ought to govern India according to the dictates of his conscience. If the Secretary of State or the merchants of Manchester feel displeased, he can resign.

THE three Indian Presidencies during 1886 will give no less than fifty-seven to swell the list of officers on colonel's allowances, Madras heading the roll with twenty-seven, Bombay giving seven, and Bengal twenty-three. In Bombay three will be from the Staff Corps and four from the locals, in Madras twelve from the Staff Corps and fifteen from the locals, in Bengal eighteen from the Staff Corps and five from the locals—a goodly number.

THE 17th Bengal Cavalry, which is one of the new regiments being raised in order to increase the strength of the Native Army, has, we hear, already obtained 600 men and 400 horses. We hope the other regiments will be as successful in obtaining the required number of recruits.

WE see from Reuter that the Russian Transcasian Railway is progressing at a rapid pace, having, indeed, already reached Kahka. We wish that we could hear of anything like corresponding progress being made with our own Trans-frontier line.

It was stated in the House of Commons on Friday, by Sir U. K. Shuttleworth, that it was intended by the Government to propose to both Houses of Parliament the appointment of a Joint Committee of Inquiry on Indian affairs. The operation of the Government of India Act, 1858, would, of course, come under the consideration of the Committee.

THE Commander-in-Chief, after his return from Burma, will make but a short stay in Calcutta during the early part of March, as he intends to visit the North-West Frontier and thoroughly examine the Trans-Indus Railways, passing on to our advanced posts in Peshin.

THE following has been received from the Afghan Frontier Commission at Charshambeh, dated Feb. 11:—

The winter continues to be very severe, the thermometer marking forty degrees of frost. The health of the members of the Mission is excellent, but the work of demarcation will be delayed.

Says the Indian Mirror:—

Our readers are probably aware of the Resolution which emanated from Lord Lytton's Government on the 10th November, 1876, directing all State railway authorities to admit Natives into the higher ranks of the Traffic Department. It is now nearly six years that the Resolution has been recorded, but the authorities have not given any effect to it. They have rather honoured the Resolution in its breach than in its observance, and it behoves the Government to make them account for it. As far as we know, not a single Native is to be found in the higher ranks of the Traffic Department, while Europeans are to be found in dozens and scores holding appointments, which by the express order of the Government are reserved to a large extent for Natives. What is the good of recording a Resolution, when you cannot give effect to it? It simply strengthens the belief, which is entertained by many, that where loaves and fishes are concerned, the Government is too apt to make distinctions of colour and creed. There is yet time to rectify the error, and carry out the instructions contained in the Resolution, in the spirit in which they are given.

THERE is a slight squeeze for "old Delhi wheat," says the Times of India, but what is meant?

Chit Chat.

ILLNESS is rampant in high places in India. General Wilson, till recently the military member of Lord Dufferin's Council, has been in critical danger, and is, indeed, even now in an alarming condition. The Maharajah Holkar is also dangerously ill, while the Maharajah of Jheend is seriously indisposed, and the Maharajah of Pattialah is laid up with an attack of typhoid.

Does not the Suez Canal afford a fair indication of the world's trade? The vessels which pass through it are not confined to one nationality, but are representative of all the maritime peoples of the earth. In 1884 the ships which passed through fell from 3,198 to 2,284, and the takings realised no higher a figure than £1,945,146, in place of £2,422,340 in 1883. Such is the teaching of the world's commercial barometer.

INDIA is safe. Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose, the rejected of Deptford, has reached its shores. Not a wrong, not an injustice, not a mistake, but that will now be put right. Strange that the British elector does not seem to think so much of the great "Babu" as he thinks of himself.

BOMBAY is delighted at the castigation inflicted by Sir James Ferguson, late Governor of that Presidency, upon that misguided and puny politician, the rejected of Manchester, the great and illustrious Mr. Slagg. Ignorance of one's subject is a common failing, but the vice is generally indulged in paths of study where few are qualified to criticise. The thanks of all honest-minded persons who love truth and hate misrepresentation are due to the worthy and triumphant Baronet, who represents one of the divisions of Manchester.

THE Times ought to feel flattered. The Statesman characterises the epitome of events during 1885, published in the former journal, as "very readable."

THE speculating world has gone crazy in regard to a gold mine, in India of which the shares, a year ago unsaleable at 2s. 6d. now fetch upwards of £10!

LAST December Calcutta had 251 hours of sunshine out of a possible number of 332 hours. Here poor Londoners do not know what the sun means. One of the most telling hits in that most charming of skits, "Haji Baba," written by Mr. Morier fifty years ago, was when the Haji returns to Persia and tells his fellow-countrymen that the English are the biggest liars he had ever met, because they told him in the great metropolis that a miserable, small, dirty, dull-looking orb was the sun, and the poor creature is dirtier, duller, and smaller than ever now, thanks to additional fog and filth.

QUETTA seems a strange mixture of gaiety, sickness, and death. People make free to-day and die to-morrow.

LEGAL proof is at all times a matter of difficulty, but it might have been thought when you are thrown overboard from a vessel's deck that it would be somewhat easy to prove assault. Dr. Currie's experience, however, seems to show that this is an erroneous notion. He got into the water, and maintains that he was pushed to his destination in the briny deep, but for the life of him he has not been able to prove that this was the case.

WHEN an extensive seizure of gunpowder was recently made in Mandalay the mark of one of the oldest firms at Rangoon was found on 200 tins. This circumstance has resulted in the cancellation of the license held by the firm in question.

THERE are, or were, in Burma a mother and son neither of whom has canine teeth or grinders, and both of whom can boast of long silky hair of a golden hue. Barnum is in the market, but has not yet succeeded in purchasing the interesting twain.

A SOLDIER in the Hampshire Regiment when carrying off a wounded officer had at least a hundred shots fired at him. What about a V.C.? Surely such a courageous act deserves the coveted decoration!

Good news for pilgrims from India; they are in future to be "personally conducted" by Messrs. Cook and Co., the great entrepreneurs of London notoriety. But will he take them from Jeddah to Mecca, and if so, will his life be worth an hour's purchase in the Holy of Holies, filled as it is by thousands of thousands of zealous and bigoted followers of the Prophet of Arabia?

How strange it is that even the well-informed are ill-informed as to India. For example, in the Pioneer of the 27th January it is stated that "Messrs. Cook's arrangements are elaborate, and calculated to make pilgrims' journeys to Mahomed's resting-place pleasanter than they have been." But Macaulay's schoolboy surely knows that the Prophet was buried at Madina, the pilgrimage to which is voluntary; and, indeed, in many cases votaries who go to Mecca dispense with the meritorious but by no means obligatory act of visiting the second sacred city of Arabia.

On the South Indian Railway a Native was recently beaten and then tied by his hair to the rails, so that he could not move. Fortunately the driver of the approaching train saw the poor wretch just in time to pull up. This is a new plan of murder.

FROM KORTI TO KHARTUM.*

There can be little doubt that this work owed its origin to a conviction on the part of the author that general dissatisfaction was felt at the failure of the Nile expedition, commanded by him, to effect anything whatever, and that some explanation of the causes of this failure was imperatively required. England had made up its mind that, at any cost, Gordon, the ideal hero, was to be rescued from his exceptionally perilous position. That he was, for reasons of "political expediency," deliberately abandoned by the treacherous politicians who had been but too glad to avail themselves of his services as a means of staving off Parliamentary defeat, was recognised by many, but not realised by the masses. When, therefore, the farce of a relief expedition was put on the stage, three months too late, "the people" thought that all was well—that Gordon could still be saved, and were ready enough to vent their spleen on the officer in command, who had just failed to bring timely succour to the hero. How far the censure thus passed on Sir C. Wilson is deserved cannot be better elucidated than by a careful perusal of his own brief narrative.

The fearful disaster of Abu Klea has often been described, and the account given at p. 34 adds but little to our information; though the way in which our soldiers were sent to certain destruction with firearms wholly useless, owing to the jamming of the cartridges, is graphically portrayed. The real interest of the book commences, however, with the departure of the little force from the vicinity of Matammeh on the 22nd of January, after receiving Gordon's note (p. 105) of 29th December, "Khartum all right, and can hold out for years." It has more than once been suggested, though the suggestion was contradicted by Mr. Gladstone in his usual ambiguous manner, and was, therefore, probably true, that Gordon had intimated that his letters were to be read "by the rule of contrary," and, if this be so, the missive would mean, "I am reduced to the utmost straits." More especially does this seem likely when Gordon's message of the 29th December, that the city can hold out for years, is read along with the entry in the journal of the 14th December, which runs thus:—"Now mark this, if the expeditionary force—and I ask for no more than two hundred men—does not come in ten days the town may fall." That this was actually the case, that the General and his garrison were starving, all subsequent evidence as to the condition of affairs at Khartum before its capture goes, taking it for what it may be worth, to prove. From Matammeh Wilson had ninety-eight miles to work up against stream before he could reach his objective point, Khartum.

The position was not free from difficulties. The original intention had been (p. 112) that Stewart was to hold Matammeh, Lord C. Beresford, Wilson, and Burnaby going on to Khartum, of which the last was to take command. The death of Burnaby, and Stewart's dangerous wound, rendered it impossible to carry out this design. Here Wilson shall speak for himself:—"The force had lost more than one-tenth of its numbers, and was encumbered by over 100 wounded. It was absolutely necessary to send a convoy off for provisions as soon as the camels could travel, and the horses of the 10th Hussars were too much done to reconnoitre any distance from camp. I had every reason to believe that forces of the enemy were advancing against us from the north and south, and I could not leave the small force in its position on the Nile without ascertaining whether it was likely to be attacked. I knew Omdurman had fallen, and that Gordon had expected Khartum to fall on Christmas Day, but I also knew that Khartum was still holding out, and I hoped that the pressure upon the town would be relieved by the large number of men sent down by the Mahdi to meet us, and that news of our victories would have got into Khartum, and given Gordon and his garrison fresh heart. At any rate, there was nothing to show—and I questioned the commanders of the steamers carefully—that the crisis at Khartum, which had been deferred from the 25th of December to the 19th of January, would be hurried on, or that a delay of a couple of days would make much difference."

Here, it seems to us, we hit the blot. "The delay of a couple of days would not make much difference." It was, we believe, the Duke of Wellington who said he had won all his battles by being on the spot half-an-hour too soon. Colonel Wilson has adduced reasons, the gravity of which no thoughtful critic would underrate, for the delay which actually occurred, and he may fairly claim all the consideration to which these reasons may entitle him. But, to speak off-hand of a couple of days not making much difference, seems to us to be a cynical disregard of every principle of strategy which has been observed from the time of Hannibal downwards.

Subject to these remarks, we see nothing to object to in the tone of this book. It is a plain, soldier-like, narrative of an adventurous voyage, the details of which have figured in every newspaper in the country, and to which, therefore, we need not refer at any length. The occurrences which preceded and followed the fall of Khartum have been reported from a variety of sources, in such fragmentary and contradictory manners that it is scarcely possible to say that we are, even now, thoroughly acquainted with them. Of one thing we may be assured. Nothing will ever come to light which will fail to raise (were that possible) the character of Gordon. Our author says, in pardonable hyperbole, "the whole Soudan is not worth the lives of men like Gordon and the two Stewarts." But it is especially with the name, and with the fate, of Charles George Gordon, that this vast district will, to Englishmen, be for all time identified.

OUR ADMINISTRATION OF INDIA.*

The title page of this book exactly expresses what it contains—a plain, readable account of District work, and of the daily routine of a District officer's life. The author's service having been passed in Bengal, he has written with primary reference to that Province, but also with advertence to the differences obtaining between Bengal, the Upper Provinces, and Madras.

So large a proportion of the Indian Revenue being derived from land, this is naturally the first subject touched on; and, when we hear from the Babus and their supporters, that the ryot is, on account of the Government demand on the land, left, in most parts of India, with "a bare margin for subsistence, and the result is, that indebtedness extends year by year, and that famines recur with ever increasing frequency and severity" ("New India," by H. J. S. Cotton, p. 55), it is not a little instructive to turn to Mr. Cunningham's statement of the real percentage of the Government revenue on the gross crops, and to find that this varies from 3·8 in the Central Provinces to about double that amount (7·8) in the North-West Provinces and Oudh. And, be it remembered, this is the only tax which the peasantry have to pay, unless they voluntarily consume exciseable articles. What with rates and taxes, it may be questioned whether many persons in England pay as little as 8 per cent. of their income towards the Government of the State. The author shows (p. 18) that the undoubted general indebtedness of the ryot in most parts of India is due to causes wholly alien from the Government claim on the land. We are disposed to agree with him (and in so doing we have the high authority of Sir R. Temple), that the land revenue administration could not, "on the whole, be made more considerate and equitable than it is at present," a statement of which no better proof could be desired than the universal increase of cultivation, amounting in some parts, both of Madras and of the North-West Provinces, to more than 100 per cent.

From the land to the only Government department—the Court of Wards—which exercises, on behalf of its protégés, the transition is easy and natural; and the administration of estates by this Court has of late been so fiercely impugned, that many readers will desire to see how the indictment has been met; and it is not unpleasant to be assured that (p. 44) "so numerous are the applications for estates to be brought under the Court of Wards, that many have to be refused;" which would hardly be the case were not the conviction general, that the estates, having the direct supervision of the District officer, are well and carefully managed. The case of the Durbhanga Raja's estate, quoted at length, from official documents, by Mr. Phillips, if at all a typical one, seems conclusively to prove this.

Passing over the author's remarks on the conservancy of the 75,000 square miles which form the forests of India; which, he thinks, will be less and less needlessly drawn on as coal production in India is more widely developed, we have displayed to us the daily work of the collector, who is supposed to have an answer ready for every question which can be put to him concerning his District, and respecting whom Mr. Phillips quotes the well-known lines:—

"The crack collector, man of equal might, Reports all day, and corresponds all night."

* "Our Administration of India. Being a Complete Account of the Revenue and Collectorate Administration in all Departments, with Special Reference to the Work and Duties of a District Officer in Bengal. By H. A. D. Phillips, Bengal Civil Service. London: W. Thacker and Co. 1886.

Here we hit, it seems to us, the great blot of the District system as at present administered. There is vastly too much writing. It is true that, as our author reminds us, collectors are bound to be "on tour" three months in the year, and gives an accurate account (p. 67) of the diversified character of their work when thus "in camp." But, even there, the cacoëthes scribendi, required at the Sudder Station, follows him as surely as Black Care sits behind the horseman.

Among other duties of the District officer is the periodical taking of the census; and a reference to this leads the author to a very interesting part of his little work, that dealing with the religious beliefs of the people, and contrasting (pp. 123, seq.) Hinduism in the abstract with what one now finds it to be. His remark, "The Hindu religion of to-day is a medley of religions, an olla podrida, a cosmogony rather than a code of ethics," though not novel, is as instructive as it is true. And Mr. Phillips' well-drawn comparison (p. 83, &c.) between the excise system, so far as intoxicants are concerned, in India and in England, is deserving of attention from those who advocate temperance by Act of Parliament.

Ascending from the District officer to the more serene regions where a judge presides, we find that the Olympus is peopled by deities resembling those who frequent the galleries of theatres. Mr. Phillips forcibly depicts the unbridled licence of Native pleaders in cross-examination, their ill-concealed insolence to the Court, and the impossibility of checking them. All this he attributes to the fact that the High Court do not support the judges. "Time is only wasted," says he, "in trying to check the introduction of irrelevant matter, or by refusing to allow irrelevant questions to be put. The pleaders wrangle and argue apparently with the set purpose of causing delay or creating a scene. It may be said, why does not the Court uphold its authority in the manner provided by law? . . . The subordinate Courts are not sufficiently supported by the High Court . . . it is a matter of common knowledge that it does not sufficiently uphold, support, and vindicate the authority of the subordinate Courts against the bar . . . it appears to be chary of allowing them to punish even the grossest cases of immediate internal contempt; the bar see this and act accordingly" (p. 158).

Mr. Phillips concludes his book with a reference to that of Mr. H. J. S. Cotton, already noticed in these columns. His courteous profession of deference for Mr. Cotton, as his senior in the service, has not prevented his inflicting on the latter a most damaging refutation of most of his more prominent allegations, which readers, if any such there be, who can entertain any doubts on the points in dispute, will do well to peruse (p. 224); and which appears to us as conclusive as to the matter as it is "telling" as to the manner.

This is, as the title page tells us, by no means Mr. Phillips' first work, but it is the first which we have seen, and, while hoping to meet him again, we will not now part from him without thanking him for a plain, unvarnished account of an administration than which few have, perhaps, ever been conducted with a more single design for the welfare of the people entrusted to it, and than which probably none has, especially of late, been more unscrupulously maligned.

AYAHS' HOME."

We have received from the Rev. G. Small, the Secretary of that admirable institution, the Strangers' Home for Asiatics, a letter pointing out that the land now occupied by the Ayahs' Home is about being taken for local improvements, and that there is every likelihood of this useful institution being given up, unless a Society, or Committee, be formed without delay for the purpose of carrying it on elsewhere, as the present proprietors and superintendents will be unable, on account of health and other circumstances, to do so, at least on their own responsibility. "As a frequent visitor at 'Rogers' Home for Ayahs,' for the purpose of religious instruction to the poor women, I know (says Mr. Small) a good deal about it, and am able to add my testimony as to the usefulness of the institution, both to the Ayahs themselves and to their employers, or ladies desiring their services, and also as a valuable sphere of Christian work for returned Indian missionaries and their wives, and for young ladies preparing for, or who have already been engaged in, Zenana missions. As an old missionary to India, and for some years past to the Asiatics in London, in connection with the Strangers' Home, I can testify that I have met with no more attentive or hopeful listeners to Gospel truths than among these women. It would indeed be a sad thing if so valuable and important an institution were finally, or even temporarily, given up. What would become of the poor women, and where would ladies be able to find suitable lodgings for their Ayahs and Daees, or readily to obtain them when wanted to take out to India, if no such asylum in London were in existence? I have been informed that one or two very appropriate tenements for the purpose are now to let in the same locality as Rogers' Home, and there could not be a better, but if prompt measures be not taken, the opportunity may be lost, and it may be difficult to find others so suitable.

"I shall be happy (Mr. Small adds) if ladies and gentlemen who feel an interest in the subject will kindly forward their names and addresses to me, either direct (at the Strangers' Home), or to the care of Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., Messrs. Grindlay and Co., or Messrs. H. S. King and Co., East Indian Agents. And arrangements may then be made for a preliminary meeting to discuss the matter, which may be followed up by one of a more public character."

We need not say that we heartily concur in Mr. Small's views, and that we shall rejoice to find that his proposals meet with general support.

TURTLE soup bids fair to become ere long a thing of the past, since the wealthy among the Americans are eating the eggs. This seems a strange notion.

INDIA has completely defeated Burma as regards the growth and export of wheat, with a result that now English money enriches the East instead of pouring in to the tune of several millions a-year to the land of the Czars. This satisfactory result will tend to make the Colonies of the north more than ever straitened for money. What about Russian stocks in this country?

THE INDIAN INCOME-TAX AND THE INDIAN SERVICES.

THE late Lord Beaconsfield was a past-master in the art of coining phrases which become proverbial. "Meddle and muddle," as representing "Liberal" foreign policy, "irresponsible chatter," as characterising "Liberal" criticisms when in opposition, will be fresh in the memory of all, and many more might be added. His alliteration phrase, "ignorant impatience of imposts," used by him when filling, as Mr. Disraeli, the onerous post of Chancellor of the Exchequer, is, however, more germane to our present purpose. It was addressed to the British taxpayer, but it is assuredly even more applicable to those Natives of India who, echoing the "irresponsible chatter" of men like Mr. Cotton and Mr. Blunt, forget, or deliberately ignore, all the benefits which British rule has conferred on India, and complain of the unavoidable expenses which that rule entails.

The whole Peninsula has, under our régime, been, so to speak, brought into working order, and the interests of the people, in most respects, studied as they were assuredly never studied by any previous Government. If the thousand and odd tribes which it contains have not, in the space of little more than a century, been welded into one homogeneous nation, they have been afforded opportunities which were never previously accorded them, and which no earlier Government would have given, of agitating among themselves for the attainment of that somewhat indefinite end; nor could any body of rulers have devised a better means of accomplishing it in the course of time than the Pax Britannica which we maintain from one end of our vast dependency to the other. Intertribal feuds are dying out, owing to the certainty that any overt attempt to revive them would meet with summary suppression.

That such results, achieved in so brief a period in a country's history, demand, and more than justify, a very considerable outlay, will hardly be denied by any but the most prejudiced. Wherefore we think it in bad taste, at least, for the self-chosen representatives of Indian public opinion to complain, if the increasing prosperity of the country be regarded as warranting, in exceptional cases, the exaction of special taxes to meet exceptional requirements.

Needless to say that these have not been the opinions put forth by the majority of the Native Press on the occasion of the late imposition of the Income-tax. It has been represented by most Native journals as wholly due to the extravagance of the Government, and especially to the unduly high salaries paid to European officials.

Now, it needs no argument to show that these are the very individuals who suffer most by the exaction of such a tax. In the first place, they cannot, as the commercial classes too often do, evade it. Their salaries are known, to the utmost rupee. These salaries were, too, fixed at a period when the purchasing value of the said rupee was vastly higher than it now is, and when the price of labour was about half that at which it now stands. The disparity of exchange has, too, caused a practical reduction of all official incomes by fully 25 per cent.

The combined effect of these various changes has been most disastrous for individuals. As a correspondent of our Lahore contemporary, the Civil and Military Gazette, puts it:—

There are many men who entered into agreements to come to this country when ten rupees meant a sovereign, or more; who entered into responsibilities upon that calculation, and who would be perfectly happy if things would be as they were, but who now view the situation with little less than consternation. I will give an instance of a case I am familiar with. A man married on Rs. 500 a month, with a prospect of reaching Rs. 600, which he shortly after attained. He has now a wife and several children, and he finds it necessary, and more economical, to keep them in England. Their support and education necessitate £30 a month. This is his present position:—

This is what he has left to maintain, clothe and amuse himself, to provide for the future, and he cannot go home on furlough, even could he save the necessary money, as his half-pay would be only some £22 a month. Yet this is the man it is proposed to tax, at present perhaps not very heavily, but with a strong probability of the percentage being increased.

The Pioneer had some sensible remarks on the same subject:—

The Government of India (it says) has now to confront an administrative problem of the greatest difficulty. It has found it necessary (and nearly every official admits the necessity) to impose a tax of nearly 3 per cent. on its employés at a time when they are already losing 20 per cent. of their salaries by the loss in exchange. To these two losses must be added the decline in salaries, which in the Covenanted Civil Service amounts to about 15 per cent. in the last twenty years: while in the Telegraph, Forest, Police, Public Works, and other Departments it is believed to be fully as much. These three deductions added together make a total loss of about 38 per cent. on salaries, and we may safely say that an Indian official receives for his own use at least 35 per cent. less now than he used to do twenty years ago. It is the fashion now to talk of the loss by exchange as 25 per cent. of salaries. This is, of course, an exaggeration, which could only be true if an Anglo-Indian spent the whole of his salary in Europe or on European articles. What is true is that he loses 25 per cent. on such portions of his salary as he remits to England or spends on articles of Western origin. To the man, however, with a large family at home, who remits them three-fourths of his pay, and spends nearly all the remaining fourth on absolutely necessary articles, such as clothes, conveyances, and the like, this portion may amount to seven-eighths of his whole salary, for the only thing on which he does not lose is his own food.

We need, it seems to us, no further proof, than the above extracts, that the new impost, superadded to those which preceded it, presses hardly on individuals. But is it not the case that this great diminution of the pay of its servants will act injuriously on the interests of the State?

No one will deny that competition has secured for the Indian Services—especially for that most important of all, the Covenanted Civil Service—men of exceptional attainments. Though the standard was very high, men have been found to satisfy its requirements, urged thereto by the magnitude of the prize to be gained by success. That the general tone, or social level, of the successful competitors has been raised, few will maintain; any more than they will refuse to admit that there are many "wallahs" who would adorn any Service whatever. On the whole, however, the position of the Civil Service cannot be said to have been raised during the last two or three decades.

This being so, is there not a great danger that, when it once becomes generally known in England that a Civilian's nominal pay of £1,000 represents in practice but some £650, the Civil Service may no longer be considered an object of such surpassing attraction as to induce the really best men to expatriate themselves for the better part of their lives? And if even the best men, intellectually speaking, fail, as we all know that they often do fail, to show the qualities which best command the respect and deference of the people of India among whom they are placed, is it not certain that an inferior class of competitors, such as diminished pay would attract, will mostly be drawn from a lower social stratum, and will be even less capable of ensuring the respect of the better classes of Natives? We do not at present presume to suggest a remedy for a state of things so fraught with danger; but it seems to us well worthy the consideration of the powers that be, in what manner it may be best, ere it be too late, to deal with it.

WE are truly glad to see that the Queen has been pleased to confer a K.C.M.G. on Captain R. F. Burton (Haji Burton), formerly of the Bombay Army, for many years Consul in Algeria, and now Consul at Trieste. The announcement of this distinction will not make the translator of the "Thousand and One Nights," and one of the ripest Arabic scholars, more distinguished, but it reminds one that Burton is at Trieste, where Arabic is not "current coin," and that another excellent diplomatist, not less versed in Arabic than Burton—William Gifford Palgrave to wit—has been for many years located in some out-of-the-way place where his linguistic abilities were utterly thrown away. Wondrous are the ways of the Foreign Office! Ordinary people might suppose that, if it be desirable to increase a Consul's salary, the simplest thing would be to do it, leaving the Consul where he was, and retaining for his Government the benefit of his experience. To put an "all round" Oriental linguist into a square hole like Trieste does not seem the height of wisdom.

OBITUARY.

MR. E. A. READE, C.B.

We much regret to announce to our readers the death of this gentleman, so well known in the North-Western Provinces as "Single Reade." It is stated:—"Mr. Edward Anderdon Reade, C.B., of Ipsden, Oxfordshire, has just died at the age of seventy-nine. Mr. Reade was acting Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces during the Indian Mutiny, organised the defences of Agra, and rendered efficient services to the gallant Havelock by supplying him with money. He was the elder brother of the late Mr. Charles Reade, the novelist."

COLONEL F. C. SINGLETON.

Colonel F. C. Singleton, C.B., Commandant of the 28th Bombay N.L., has died while on his way to Europe. He entered the army on December 9th, 1859, and was appointed to the 28th Bombay

N.L. on Oct. 6th, 1884. He took part in the Afghan war of 1879-80. He was employed with the force which covered the retreat from Maiwand, and also took part in the subsequent defence of Candahar, receiving the brevet rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. The prominent part taken by his regiment in the recent Soudan campaign will be within the memory of all. Their gallant conduct at MacNeill's zereba was the subject of general comment at the time, and it was universally admitted by competent critics that the regiment had fought as well as any of the regiments which took part in the affair. Colonel Singleton, for his services in the Soudan, received a medal and two clasps and the Commandership of the Bath.

INDIA OFFICE NEWS.

We hear with pleasure the subjoined announcement in the Gazette. Our readers will hardly need to be told how long Sir J. Danvers was connected with Indian Railways and other public works in his capacity as Government-Director of the various companies, nor how much they owe to his zealous advocacy of their best interests:—

INDIA OFFICE, FEB. 8.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to nominate and appoint Juland Danvers, Esq., Secretary to the Public Works Department, of the India Office, to be a Knight Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India.

MANY stories are told by Sir Charles Trevelyan when he was appointed Finance Minister at Calcutta; but few are better than the adventure with the swell head of a department to whom Sir Charles paid a visit. Not waiting to be announced or ushered in the latter received a volley of abuse, rating him for his impatience, &c. In the end the irate official angrily demanded of his intruder his name and address and object of appearing. "I am only Sir Charles Trevelyan," was the quiet reply which fell on the ears of the terrified and bewildered man of red tape and quills.

A ZEMINDAR of note in Bengal, who was wont to travel third-class, consented on the advice of his friends to travel on one occasion first-class, with the result that he was compelled, so he says, to shampoo two English officers, who commanded their swarthy fellow-traveller thus to minister to their comforts. Can this be true?

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & CO., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33 Gt. Russell St., W.C.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA. IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. ## BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

The Offices of the "Broad Arrow" are removed from 2, Waterloo Place, to

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the 12th February; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 10th February.

THE Times' Correspondents inform us of the return of Lord Dufferin from Burma, and of his arrival at Madras, where he was greeted with enthusiasm, the city being, in fact, en fête. Before leaving Mandalay he received the Buddhist Archbishop and Phoongyees, or monks, and assured them that their sacred images would in no way be interfered with.

LADY DUFFERIN'S reception on the 17th February was attended by leading Mahomedan ladies as well as by the Burmese ladies. They all went away delighted with their reception, and expressed a strong desire to be allowed to again pay their respects to her Excellency.

At a dinner given in the Palace on the 18th, and attended by General Roberts, Mr. Bernard, General Prendergast, and the heads of Departments, the Viceroy, after some observations in praise of General Prendergast's military operations, and, after announcing that a gratuity of 300,000 rupees had been granted to the Burma expeditionary force, touched lightly on political matters, saying that the invasion of Burma was undertaken with regret by the Indian Government. We had no quarrel with the inhabitants of the country, and the prospect of the conquest of the country, whatever might be the ultimate advantages, was certain to be fraught with immediate anxiety and embarrassments. On the other hand, the existing relations between ourselves and the Burmese Court had become intolerable, inasmuch as they were fast tending to jeopardise the security and the most vital interests of our territories. We, therefore, chose the lesser of two evils, and determined to put an end to the disastrous rule of a prince who was a curse to his own subjects and an impossible neighbour. But in directing General Prendergast to advance upon Mandalay, the Government of India reminded him that it would be his duty to come as little as possible into collision with the people of the country, who are kindred in blood, in religion, and in all material interests with our own subjects in Lower Burma.

FROM Rangoon we hear that the Viceroy, before leaving Burma, laid the foundation stone of the Anglican Cathedral, and expressed his opinion that the Burmese nation were "a most lovable people," and that those "were happy whose lot was cast among them." He would seem to have left a most favourable impression; for we read that—

Lord Dufferin's visit to Burma has been thoroughly successful. The courtesy which he showed to all classes and nationalities in the community, the interest which he displayed in all matters affecting the welfare of the Province, and the thorough mastery which he has exhibited of the various and complicated questions that he has had to deal with, have given universal satisfaction.

THE question as to the allotment to public works and judicial expenses of so small a part of the revenues of Burma has been so often mooted, that it may be worth while to quote the purport of the Viceroy's reply to a representation on the subject from the Rangoon Chamber of Commerce, in which he incidentally alluded to the arrangements about to be made for the future administration of the Province:—

Referring to an allusion made to the fact that Lower Burma paid over to the Indian Exchequer a net million a year, Lord Dufferin observed that though he could not accept that statement as representing the whole case, yet it was undoubtedly true that Lower Burma was a very rich Province, and for many years past had been in a position to transmit large contributions to the revenues of India. But, on the other hand, she was allowed to retain in her own possession a larger proportion of her income than most other Provinces. Consequently, though the Indian taxpayer had largely benefited, it might fairly be contended that Burma herself had not been wronged. Moreover, the expenses which the late war might entail, and which would be a charge on the Indian Budget, might very well be regarded as a set-off to the alleged overplus of revenue which Lower Burma seemed inclined to complain of paying for Imperial purposes. Lord Dufferin added:—

"You are aware that by the Queen's proclamation of the 1st of January, after Upper Burma was annexed to Her Majesty's possessions and placed under the personal administration of the Viceroy; of course it was obvious that the latter part of this arrangement could only be of a provisional character. This fact, together with other circumstances, seems to have cast a certain amount of ambiguity over the character of the proclamation itself.

"In order, therefore, to remove any doubts as to the nature of the government to be established in Upper Burma, I may at once tell you that that Province will be placed under the direct and immediate control of British officers. The largest possible use, of course, will be made of Native assistance, but the supreme government of the country will be in the hands of Her Majesty's British officials. I trust that the conclusions thus arrived at by Her Majesty's Government will prove as conducive to the benefit of Lower Burma as I have no doubt they will be to the welfare and happiness of Her Majesty's subjects in Upper Burma."

In pursuit of this policy, it is understood that the Hloodaw will be formally dissolved by proclamation on Mr. Bernard's return to Mandalay, which will occur in about ten days. Both Upper and Lower Burma are now united in one Province, under Mr. Bernard as Chief Commissioner, who will reside in Mandalay for some time.

WE regret to hear that Mr. H. L. St. Barbe, Deputy Commissioner of Bassein, has been killed by dacoits. It seems that he was following them in a steamer with a small force and landed to reconnoitre, attended only by an orderly and a guide. All three were shot. The captain of the steamer landed and recovered the bodies, being wounded in doing so.

MR. ST. BARBE will be remembered by our readers as our last Resident at Mandalay. It was under his orders that the final withdrawal of our Residency was effected, without loss of life, though assuredly not without loss of dignity. His withdrawal was effected under positive orders. But he had, while entrusted with discretion as our Agent at a semi-barbarous Court, shown both courage and judgment; and he was destined, had he survived, for a prominent position in Upper Burma.

WE learn from Merv, under date Feb. 28:—

A detachment of Russian troops, under Colonel Alikhanoff, made a formal entry into Penjdeh on the 13th Feb. in presence of a large concourse of people.

The Colonel announced to the representatives of the Saryks the union of the district with Russia and the establishment of a Russian administration.

A Saryk-Turcoman aul which remained on Afghan soil will settle on Russian territory.

This last paragraph is significant enough.

COLONEL RIVETT-CARNAC, late Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief of Bombay, has left India, accompanied by a flood of eulogy from the Indian Press. Personally popular, he has won distinction throughout India by his efforts to improve the position of the Sepoy, and by his excellent articles on the Russian advance. In particular, Colonel Rivett-Carnac has paid special attention to the defence of Meshed from Russian aggression, and is known to be an authority on the Persian Gulf region. Still in the prime of life—he is only forty-five—Colonel Rivett-Carnac has before him a fresh career of usefulness in this country, and we may expect to see his capacity and experience fitly utilised in some appropriate appointment by the Home authorities as soon as he arrives.

REMEMBERING the nature of the country in which our "bout" with the Russians is likely to come off, and the terrible way in which our Native troops suffer from cold, it is unpleasantly suggestive that our officers on the Afghan Frontier Commission should be so struck with the hardness of the Cossacks composing the Russian escort:—

The Cossacks (writes one of the former) are a wonderfully hardy race of men and do not seem to feel the cold in the least. On the march they come in, tie their ponies' heads together, throw them some grass, and then lie down on the ground and go to sleep all in a row in their clothes just as they are, without any covering or bedding beyond what they have on their ponies. The latter, too, stand out all night in any weather, without any protection from the cold beyond their own shaggy coats, whereas our horses have all to be carefully swathed in a couple of big felt numdahs and probably a blanket underneath in addition. The contrast, of course, seems very great to us, all fresh from an Indian climate; but doubtless, if our men were all inured to Russian winters and were mounted on nothing but Shetland ponies, they could do much the same should necessity arise; but no one knows what loss of life is incurred in the Russian army through the want of proper provision of shelter for their men when on service.

We still find the Native papers speaking of the increase in the expenditure. The Bombay Chronicle is of opinion that—

The memorial of the Bombay Presidency Association on the subject of the recent arrangement of augmenting the permanent number of the Indian Army by thirty thousand troops, European and Native, and imposing on this country a new burden of more than two millions sterling per annum, is an ably drawn up representation of the views of the Natives of this Presidency in respect of the high-handed act of the Government. As stated in the memorial, no case has been made out to the satisfaction of the country justifying the new and grievous burden. In fact not so much as an intelligible attempt has been made by the authorities to explain to Her Majesty's Indian subjects the necessity for the action they have suddenly taken for so largely augmenting the number of the permanent garrison of the country during a time of profound peace, and just when the increased means of inter-communication and other facilities for the adoption of prompt and efficient action available to Government either for preserving internal order or repelling foreign attack even in cases of emergency, should have suggested the propriety of reducing rather than augmenting the previous number of British troops serving in this country and causing a heavy drain of its resources,

On both sides of India the outcry against the Income-tax continues. Quoth the Bharatbasi:—

The Government of India says that there will be a deficit of sixty lakhs of rupees in the next year. If the Viceroy and his officials would give up their luxuries to a certain extent, the amount might be easily saved. The Viceroy need neither go to Simla nor erect a building on the Observatory Hill. The visits of the Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and the Panjab, and of the Governors of Bombay and Madras, to the hills during the summer should be stopped. The travelling allowances of the magistrates, commissioners, engineers and other officials should be curtailed. Fifty or sixty lakhs of rupees would thus easily be retrenched. But officials who love luxury will not try to check this unnecessary waste of money.

It was not (thinks the Bangabasi) proper for the Government to make a distinction between Government servants and servants in private service. But distinctions have also been made between military men and officers serving in other departments. We know that in time of war the Government cannot afford to offend military men, and it would have been better to admit as much distinctly.

Instead of imposing the Income tax it would (opines the Sahachar) have been better to re-impose the import duties. But the Government has no power to do so. The Liberals, the Radicals, and the Conservatives all fear the Manchester merchants, and the Government of India is helpless. This tax is not liked either by the Anglo-Indians or the Natives, and if it is imposed permanently we shall understand that neither the Government of India, nor the British Parliament, nor Her Majesty, is our ruler, but that the Manchester merchants are.

The Indian Spectator rightly observes that much depends on the manner in which, and the instrumentality by which, a necessarily unpopular measure is carried out. It says:—

The Income-tax Bill has been passed in hot haste in spite of remonstrances to the contrary from all sides. But it may be some consolation to the opponents to know that substantial improvement has been effected by the Select Committee in the measure as a whole. A good deal, however, depends upon the working of the more unpopular provisions. If the Government of Bombay could obtain the services of an expert like Mr. Dosabhai Framji we agree that it would have a most assuring effect on the public mind. There is scarcely another man in all India with Mr. Dosabhai's tact and experience as a collector.

The Indian Planters' Gazette tells us that, since the Bengal Tenancy Act was put in force, 120 estates fell into arrears at the last Kist, or instalment, and are, consequently, up for sale.

From the Overland circular of colonial and foreign produce of Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson of 38, Mincing-lane, London, dated 25th February, 1886, we learn that our Produce Markets, influenced by the stagnation pervading all branches of trade, are still somewhat unsettled. The few parcels East India coffee of the new crop brought forward have found buyers, latterly at rather lower rates, and the quality still does not prove equal to expectations. Ceylon has again sold with irregularity, and generally in favour of the buyers. The tea-market is steady, although devoid of activity. At the public sales the moderate supplies have brought better prices for the common grades of Congou; Indian growths up to 1s. per lb, met with fair competition, but teas above went slowly. Rice has been firm, steamer cargoes of Burma Spring shipment, bringing fully previous rates. East India Cinchona has sold at about previous rates.

The last weeks allotment of India Council remittances differed but little from that of the preceding week. On Feb. 17 the whole 40 lacs were placed at the minimum of 1s. 6d. per rupee, on Wednesday last a little less than 39 lacs were placed at that minimum, one lac at 1s. 6 1-32d., and Rs.10,000 at 1s. 6 1-16d. About eight lacs of telegraphic transfers were disposed of at 1s. 6 1-32d. and 1s. 6 1-16d., and special sales of 2½ lacs of bills were also reported at 1s. 6 1-16d. per rupee. The total sales of the day amounted to Rs.50,45,000 as compared with a little over 53 lacs at the previous allotment. Next week the amount to be offered for tender will be increased from 40 to 50 lacs. From April 1st to February 23rd inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.11,02,30,56½, realising £8,411,388. To the corresponding date last year Rs.14,33,78,018, realising £11,584,759, had been disposed of.

We are informed by the India Office that the following were the successful candidates at the examination for the India Medical Service on the 8th of February; 37 candidates, all of them qualified, competed for the 16 appointments:—

IN VINO VERITAS.—Among the guns captured at Mandalay (writes a correspondent in Upper Burma) is a remarkable piece of ordnance, about which there is a curious story said to be authentic, which is worthy of repetition. The gun is to be sent home to Her Majesty, and among other particulars of its history the tale will no doubt accompany it. The gun is about the size of an 13-pounder, and is built probably of bronze, but its material is concealed by a veneer of gilding. It is borne on a four wheeled carriage, also gilt, covered over by a gilt dome or cupola. While hardly adapted for warlike operations, the gun would undoubtedly become more peaceful scenes, such as a terrace of the quadrangle at Osborne or Windsor. It seems to have been held in superstitious regard by the late King, who, the story relates, proceeded to consult the oracle on his chances of success when war seemed imminent with the English. The phoongyee or priest engaged in the operation is said to have availed himself of the opportunity to convey to his Majesty a strong hint of the probable result of hostilities. The method of consultation consisted in pouring the contents of a bottle of wine down the inclined mouth of the gun, the phoongyee declaring that, if the King was destined to come off victorious, the cannon would retain the wine, but, if defeat had been pre-ordained for him, then it would vomit forth the liquor. By some means, about which the story does not enter into particulars, the latter contingency befell and the gun cast forth the wine soon after swallowing it. "Surely," said the phoongyee, turning in apology to the King, "surely a nat (malignant spirit) has done this."

Chit Chat.

LORD DUFFERIN possesses the happy and rare knack of saying pretty things in the prettiest of ways. What could be more charming than the invitation to a ball at the Government House Calcutta, which he addressed to the distinguished Foreign Representatives who had attended the Camp of Exercise, Delhi:—"I will commission my daughter to welcome them to Government House in Lady Dufferin's name and my own, and to give a ball in their honour in order that they may have an opportunity of convincing themselves how favourable is our climate to feminine beauty; that our ladies' eyes are more dangerous than our artillery; their wit more pointed than our bayonets, and that they are ready to give them as kind, though, perhaps, a more dangerous welcome to the capital of India as that which we have endeavoured to extend to them in our camp at Delhi."

A young Indian author, writing of home life, says:—"Here one boy plasticises his countenance with a melancholy mood." Again, the mother "extricates herself from the oppressive encumbrance of her household duties, and from the most insupportable heat and the choking smoke of the kitchen." Such and much more in the same strain is the language in which young India tries to teach old England.

THE "powers that be" in India are beginning to find what lesser luminaries knew years ago, that Madras troops must be employed oftener in the field or not at all; otherwise, from want of that confidence which experience alone can ensure, the men are liable to panic. But why should they always be left in the cold? History can tell some superb exploits of the Madrassesees in the good old days when fighting depended more upon individual prowess than upon superiority of weapons.

A STATEMENT appeared in the Rangoon Gazette to the effect that Lieutenant O'Meara, of the Royal Engineers, while out by himself on Sunday, was attacked by dacoits and cut to pieces. The Pioneer points out that this information is somewhat incorrect; the officer in question was not out by himself, neither, too, was he cut to pieces, nor did the whole affair happen on a Sunday. This is truly delicious.

THE same paper points out a hardship to officers serving in India which it might be thought only needs investigation to ensure its abolition. Under the rules of the Civil Code, if a person be entitled to, say six months' furlough and six months' leave on private affairs, he must return to India from Europe on the expiration of the first term before he can get a second period of furlough, the reason being that the two cannot by regulation merge into one. Surely this is red tape with a vengeance? In fact, all the leave rules need revision. Many of them are relics of bygone days, when life in India was passed under totally different circumstances as compared with the ways and habits of modern times.

WHEN Lord Dufferin visited Burma there were nineteen triumphal arches erected in honour of his Excellency's visit; there were five Burmese, two Chinese, one Karen, two Moguls, while the Jews, Chetties, Marwaris, Suratis, Chuttiahs, Tillays, Moodhars, and the cantonment boasted of one each. When Lord Ripon paid a like visit there were but ten such tokens of esteem.

MR. PITT KENNEDY, of Calcutta fame, has denounced the Government of India as a "purda nishin" body. The sarcasm is neat; but applies to all forms of despotism.

THE umpires at the Delhi Camp, as was pointed out a few weeks ago, may have made mistakes, but they, too, have cause of complaint, as in some instances the officers proceeded to argue as to the soundness of the orders given for the withdrawal of troops from action as hors de combat. What on earth could an umpire do in such circumstances?

MR. EDWIN ARNOLD, of Buddhist notoriety, went to Benares in order to travel on the same road as that which was hallowed by the sacred footsteps of the illustrious Buddha; but, alas! no one could show him the precise spot, and he returned a "sadder," and, let us hope, a "wiser" man.

AT Secunderabad a novel cricket match has been played, "Handsome" against "Uglies." A committee of ladies discharged the very invidious duty of selecting the team. It is stated that a very merry afternoon was passed. We are glad, for it might have been otherwise; since to be publicly "gibbeted" as a hideous monstrosity does not, as a rule, improve the temper or promote good feeling.

QUETTA, as usual, is gay. This week a bachelors' ball, a paper chase, and some theatricals, but, to crown all, a nasty railway accident.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

We have, in this number, intermingled with much of miscellaneous interest, no lack of current politics, and of information by the help of which to form a sound opinion thereon. Mr. Bosworth Smith, in the first paper, treats of "The Liberal Party and Home Rule," and shows up, in terms severe, but none too severe, the truckling to the Home Rule party, as a means of returning to office, possession of which seems to be the air he breathes, exhibited by the Head of the "Liberal"—rather call it the Radical—party. (By the way, why do Conservative writers habitually acquiesce in the use by their adversaries, of the term Liberal? They might at least mark it as being, what it in effect is, a quotation.) Mr. Parnell, as the writer justly remarks, is the "keeper of Mr. Gladstone's" conscience, of the entity or non-entity, that is, which goes by the name.

Political matters are also handled, and well handled, in his usual animated style, by Mr. Alfred Austin, in the "Party and Patriotism" with which the number closes, while Mr. J. L. Derwent, seemingly taking for his text, "The thing which has been is the thing which shall be," gives a very vivid and instructive account of the last Irish Parliament, as a foretaste of what might be expected were such an institution re-established. "If England," he concludes, recalling Grattan's well-known saying (England has sown her laws like dragon's teeth, and they have sprung up in armed men), "desires to be cursed with a more extensive crop of the same kind, there is an admirable opportunity just now of sowing the seed. Happily the signs of the times would rather indicate the determination of the country that no axe—not even Mr. Gladstone's—shall be laid to the roots of the Union of 1800."

A very interesting and important Essay is that by Mr. Boyd, "The Depression of Trade, and State-directed Colonisation," in which he endeavours to trace the various causes of the existing depression, and examines, with much care, the question, how far State-directed Colonisation can be regarded as a remedy for it. This Paper, perhaps the most important in the number, is one to which we could not hope to do justice without occupying far more space than is at our disposal. But we earnestly commend it to the attention of our readers: few will rise from its perusal without being the richer both in new facts and in new ideas.

"French interests in Egypt" is the title of an instructive historical article by Mr. Harold Perry, who seems to us to have reduced them almost to vanishing point; as having been in their inception of the most trifling character, and (though they were brought into prominence by Napoleon, at a time when "the Directory were casting about for some means of removing from France the terrible servant who behaved so much like their master"), essentially factitious, possessing indeed no real raison d'être except as a means of showing enmity to England.

Intending emigrants to the land of cattle ranches on the confines of Canada and the United States may well hesitate to take any definite steps in pursuance of their design until they have read Mr. George Alexander's most suggestive Paper on the "Newer North West." No one, says Mr. Alexander, should think of ranch-holding, whether for sheep or cattle who does not possess at least £2,000. Advice, for offering which he gives his reasons in detail.

Mr. Mallock's novel "The Old Order Changes," has got well into the second book, and sustains its interest; nor must we close without a word of commendation for Linda Villari's "Venetian Playwright," an interesting account of the now all but forgotten Carlo Gozzi (1720-1806).

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.†

The article on "Modern Naval Questions" deals with the tactics of the future, and, especially, with the changes which the use of torpedos in their various forms may be expected to bring about. As a thoughtful contribution to the solution of a question, the importance of which cannot be exaggerated, the paper is well deserving of attention; yet, at a time when ironclads take years in building, and when their cost is reckoned by hundreds of thousands, the question "whether England's 15,000,000 tons of import" (to a great extent, be it remembered, food supplies) "and the 17,000,000 tons of export are all to be escorted by ironclad squadrons," and, if not, how to be secured, is one which the majority of the classes most concerned seem hardly to consider worth a thought.

An instructive comparison, under the title of "Refractory Nationalities," between our relations with the Irish, and those of Austria and Russia with the Hungarians and Poles respectively, is suggestive, if not altogether satisfactory as to the future. Two articles will interest Indian readers, Mr. Buckland's experiences as a Calcutta Volunteer in 1857, and Captain Norman's account of the baptism of fire of his Martini-Henry, three well-directed shots from which discomfited a body of over a hundred Waziris.

who endeavoured to cut off him and his little escort while surveying, in the hills near the mouth of the Gomul Pass, in 1870: the "lifting of the purda" from the mountains being a sore grievance to such an inveterate robber-tribe. Passing from the East, to the West, Indies, we should say that "Soldiering in Jamaica" gives a very clear account of life in that not over salubrious island; while the narrative "After Froschwiller" records a brilliant instance of patriotic self-devotion on the part of a French peasant in deliberately drowning himself in order to avoid betraying a ford to the enemy.

The number is every way a good one: in fact, there is not an article in it which will not be read with interest.

TEN YEARS IN THE JUNGLE.*

"Enriched by experiences in foreign lands, wealth which cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, nothing but a desire to have others share with me, through the medium of these pages, the delights of forest and field, river and sea, could have impelled me to the laborious task of writing this narrative in hours which should have been devoted to rest and recreation. But if a single reader (always excepting the proof-reader) has followed me thus far, and experienced in sympathy a hundredth part of the delight which quickens my blood as I think of the scenes which I have feebly attempted to describe for him, I can say that my labour has not been in vain."

Thus writes Mr. Hornaday, and few who read his work will begrudge him a share of the pleasure which a perusal of this most charming work is sure to produce. It is the habit of Englishmen to look somewhat askance at the adventures of their brethren who do "puja" to the "almighty dollar," and perhaps the aversion is more or less well-founded, since the swagger and bombast which are the characteristics of the ordinary Yankee do not inspire confidence or increase respect; but in this instance the national mistrust must be set aside, for Mr. Hornaday has been most careful not to exaggerate, and the account of his adventures is a plain, unvarnished record of fact, mingled withal with a not inconsiderable sprinkling of genuine American humour.

This enterprising traveller started on his wanderings with the object of collecting specimens of the larger animals of the East, so as to enrich his national land with objects of interest of which there was a great deficiency. He first visited India, and commenced his experiences by partaking of stewed octopus, a dish "as tough as india-rubber and as salt as the ocean." After wandering about Bombay for a while, quarrelling with "gharry-walas," or hack-drivers, whom he denounces in terms of reproach, which apply equally to the "bullock-backery," the national "go-cart" of Western India, Mr. Hornaday started by boat to Etawah, on the Jumna, a journey which enabled him to record an opinion that "cleanliness, or rather bathing, is the only feature of a Hindu's religion which is not objectionable." But his aim was animals, not men; so quitting the scenes of civilisation he betook himself to the more solitary places, and we soon find him in the midst of "gavials," a kind of crocodile which, in common with all its genus, is very difficult to secure, as they sink immediately they are shot, and never appear again to the disconsolate hunter's eyes. The most interesting part of this sport was feeding the carrion birds which swarmed on the bank wherever flesh was "going begging," and the account of fights and squabbles between vultures, hawks and crows is most amusing. But birds in the East seem addicted to queer antics—fancy a flock of cranes indulging in a regular dance upon a level sandbank.

Of course cromation, as practised on the banks of the Jumna, did not pass unheeded, with a result that the opinion is put forward that "body burning is a mere shallow pretence, and might just as well have been dispensed with for all it amounted to in reality." Ofttimes a live coal is put upon the tongue of the corpse, which is then and there pushed into the sacred stream, a proceeding which is supposed to comply with the requirements of the Hindu religion.

The grandest sport in India is, it need scarce be said, tiger-hunting, a pastime which is always more or less dangerous, even if pursued from the back of an elephant, but when, as is frequently the case, the fierce animal is attacked face to face, the sportsman needs a good gun, a steady aim, and unbounded courage. In the Animallais Mr. Hornaday found his royal game—"old stripes," as he facetiously describes him. When about thirty yards from his antagonist, the latter scented the hunter, and, raising his head, looked in the direction where he detected danger. A shot, however, in the left eye betokened that the aim had not missed, while a second wound in the neckbone brought the angry beast to the ground a corpse. The pride of success may well have been felt as the hunter stood over this monster, which measured 9 feet 8½ inches from nose to tail, and weighed 495 lbs. "Up to that time I could not make myself believe that a tiger can pick up a man in his mouth and run away with him as easily as a terrier does a rat. But when I measured that great brute I saw and realised just how it is done."

Soon after this the party secured their second grand prize in the shape of an elephant, which they dissected in order to secure a perfect skeleton; but fancy cutting up four tons of flesh. "At the scene of action," says the author, "there was about an acre of meat, pieces of skin, blood, brains, and viscera."

But leaving the thousand and one minor animals which were bagged, we pass on to Ceylon, the second happy hunting-ground, where he met with most charming scenery, most "official kindness," a lovely climate, a doctor who cured him of fever, and plenty of nectar in the shape of cocoanut milk—hot, or rather cold—from the tree. While, however, he enriched his collection in this island with numerous and precious specimens, they were mostly obtained by Native collectors, who had learned to worship the "almighty dollar."

From lovely, happy Ceylon Mr. Hornaday passed to the Malay Peninsula, the land of the Durian fruit, resembling in size and shape a pineapple, but bristling on the outside with an array of dark green conical spines three-fourths of an inch high and very sharp. "This wholly abominable food smells even more offensive than it looks, the odour given off being like that of a barrel of onions at its most aggressive stage." But internally is an exquisite mixture resembling flour paste of indescribable richness and delicacy. "If there are no durians in heaven," exclaims the enthusiastic gourmand, "it will be the fault of the husk, not the kernel."

This country abounds with mud lagoons, teeming with all sorts of birds, beasts, and fishes, but the principal sport consisted of catching crocodiles with a hook and line, and then hauling them to shore, a task which needs at least three men.

Last, but not least, Borneo was visited, and the occasion is taken to pay testimony to the value of Rajah Brooke's efforts to introduce the blessings of civilisation amongst the inhabitants of that fertile island.

Need it be said that in the land of the "ourang-outang," the "proboscis monkey," and the "gibbon," there was plenty of sport? but we have already exceeded the space allotted to us, and are reluctantly compelled to take leave of Mr. Hornaday's most interesting volume, a work written with all the simplicity of a sportsman, and with all the earnestness of a man of science; accurate and truthful, it carries its own commendation, and the reading public owe a debt of gratitude to its author, the naturalist, Mr. W. T. Hornaday.

We are glad to see that Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. are about to publish a new edition of that interesting record of Tamil theology, the "Sacred Kurral of Tiruvalluva-Nayanar," with metrical translation, notes, grammar, lexicon, and concordance. The author is the Rev. Dr. G. W. Pope, well known as perhaps the first living Tamil scholar. The work, which will form a volume of about 600 pages 8vo., is intended to be a complete introduction to the poetical dialect of Tamil. Much of the Naladiyār is introduced in the notes. It will be uniform with Dr. Pope's "Tamil Handbook," fourth edition, to which it will be a supplement.

DELHI.

No apology is needed for the reprint of the following glowing and admirable letter which appeared in the Times of India in regard to the grand old historic city of Delhi, with its glorious associations and proud memories :—

"There seems at first sight no particular connection between Delhi and cauliflowers. And yet it seems the great object with all sorts of people here to possess one of these favourite vegetables which appear to flourish in great size and splendour. You meet a little Goorkha returning from the city with a cauliflower on his shoulder almost as big as himself. A Sikh sepoy with a smile on his handsome face is bearing home the same trophy. Entering the famous bazaar, you find a British matron cheapening a cauliflower in the Imperial city of Delhi. But the fact is that the great army which has captured and held peaceful possession of Delhi for the last ten days has been a great boon to the inhabitants, who have reaped a golden harvest from the invaders. The Chandnee Chowk, the fame whereof is world-wide, is a sight to be seen at about four o'clock every afternoon. The broad street is filled with a brilliant throng representing most of the nations of the earth. Soldiers and sepoys in every shade and variety of uniform good-humouredly jostle true believers, handsomely shawled and turbaned, while Persians, who look fairer than the bronzed Englishmen around them, Turks, Armenians, and "all sorts and conditions of men" walk along with the gravity of Easterns who find nothing in life to be amused at. And the Delhi jewellers lie in wait outside their shops, and importune each passer-by to invest in their wares. "Come and look see, master, only come and look see," is their prayer to each possible customer, and, from the number of people who accept their invitation, it is more than probable that they drive a roaring trade. It is a wonderful scene, and the brilliant sunshine in which everything is steeped brings out the gay costumes, the rich colours, the glittering silver and brass work exposed for sale, the bales of silks and coloured stuffs, and the thousand beautiful objects for which Delhi is famous, into bold relief. As you watch the gay crowd, laughing, gesticulating, buying and selling and making bargains, each man apparently in the highest good humour and spirits, as if there was no such thing as care in the world, it seems hard to realise what a tragic history this same Delhi has, how often it has been sacked and given up to the horrors of pillage and massacre, and how it was only so far back as 1739 that Nadir Shah with his Persians looted Delhi to the extent of thirty millions sterling; and that after his departure the Mahrattas swooped down on the fated city at regular intervals when they were hard up, and pillaged everything they could lay hands on. It is barely a hundred years ago since the Mahrattas, having looted everything else, tore down the handsome silver ceiling of the Dewan Khas, one of the most beautiful buildings in the Delhi fort, and melted it, realising some £170,000 by the operation. But as one watches the merry crowd, buying and selling and laughing in the Chandnee Chowk to day, it is difficult to bring home to oneself how often the fair city and its handsome, intelligent population have been given up to fire and sword, and it is a good thing that peoples, like individuals, so easily forget. But those Englishmen who are always trying to blacken English rule in India might with advantage study the history of the city of Delhi. They would then in common honesty be forced to acknowledge that under our much-abused Sirkar, there is security for life and property, and that the strong and rapacious can no longer prey on the weak and defenceless.

It would take at least a month to "do" all the wonderful sights of Delhi satisfactorily. But after seeing all that is most beautiful and noteworthy in the way of palaces, ruins, tombs, not forgetting the Kootub, and the splendid pile of buildings in which rest the remains of the Emperor Humayun, if I were asked what is the most interesting object in Delhi to an Englishman I should reply that it is none of these. Near the Cashmere-gate, with its splendid associations and memorials of English valour, there is a small cemetery, a little way off the road, and half hidden by trees. Pushing open the wooden gate, you find yourself in an enclosure studded with graves, and to the right of the gate you notice a winding path marked out by shot and shell piled up in little heaps. Following this path for a dozen yards or so, you come to a grave railed in and standing rather above its fellows. Looking over the rails, you read on a plain, flat gravestone the following inscription :—

BRIGADIER GENERAL
who led the assault of Delhi, but fell in the hour of victory, mortally wounded,
and died
23rd September, 1857,
aged 35.

That is all. There is no eulogy. There is nothing to tell a stranger that this bare tomb with its meagre inscription covers one of the bravest and most noble Englishmen that ever lived. There is no cross on the grave. There are none of those pious words with which poor humanity records its eternal protest against the doctrine of nothingness. No, as Nicholson lived somewhat apart from his fellows, proud, austere, and towering over them by a head and shoulders, so he fitly lies in an unadorned grave, and no vain words of praise mock the grandeur and simplicity of death. I repeat, that to an Englishman the most sacred thing in Delhi is Nicholson's grave. Its very contrast to the magnificent surroundings of palace and mausoleum, for which Delhi is famous, makes its simplicity all the more impressive. As we turn to leave the cemetery, the setting sun lights up Nicholson's tomb, and sheds a soft light over the graves around. A perfect stillness holds the air, and the scene is one of the utmost quiet and peace. Bidding adieu to the spot where lies one of England's greatest sons, the old familiar lines rise unbidden to the lips—

The Knight's body is dust,
And his good sword is rust,
His soul is with the Saints, we trust.

For my own part, I must say that interesting as the ancient history of Delhi is, and magnificent as the memorials of its departed splendour undoubtedly are, the siege of Delhi during the great mutiny of 1857 is the most fascinating episode of all. Often as one has read the story in Kaye—and Kaye has told it with a spirit and vigour that carry the reader completely with him—not until one visits Delhi does one fully comprehend what a magnificent feat of arms was the capture of the city in 1857. The sublime audacity with which a handful of Englishmen undertook the siege of a city whose strongly fortified walls were bristling with guns, and whose garrison consisted of sixty thousand rebels, whom we ourselves had armed and trained to war, is almost without a parallel in history. As you come out of the Cashmere-gate on a bright, cold morning, to ascend the Ridge, almost every step you take reminds you of some incident of the siege. The Cashmere-gate itself, all knocked about by shot and shell, and with the memorial tablet erected by Lord Napier to the heroic sappers who blew it in under a storm of fire from the enemy, is a living memento of the past. Then a quarter of a mile further on is Ludlow Castle, where the attacking columns fell in for the final assault. And mounting to the Ridge itself, there stands the Flagstaff Tower, still bearing the honourable scars of the enemy's bullets. Walking along the Ridge you come to Hindoo Rao's house, where some of the heaviest fighting took place, and then comes the memorial monument on which are inscribed the strength of the besieging force, the names of the various actions fought, and of the officers who were killed. Looking down on Delhi with its vast extent of fortifications, one can only wonder how our gallant countrymen, and the few brave native soldiers who remained loyal could have held their own from the end of May to the middle of September against an enemy constantly reinforced, and harassing them night and day. While they were supposed to be besieging Delhi, they were themselves hemmed in by a foe who outnumbered them by ten to one. According to every known rule of warfare, and according to all those books on military science which are now taught in garrison classes, the English ought to have been annihilated. But being Englishmen they went in and won, and with Nicholson at their head, they stormed the rebel city, and drove the mutineers out at the point of the bayonet. By a curious coincidence, Sir Frederick Roberts's large tent in the Commander-in-Chief's camp behind the Ridge, is pitched nearly on the exact spot where his little tent was, when as a subaltern he took part in this glorious feat of arms.

But I must bring this long letter to a close. The interest of the subject must be my excuse for its length. I went out to Humayun's tomb to see what kind of a place it was from which the brave Hodson, of Hodson's Horse, dragged the two Princes before he shot them. If Mr. Bosworth Smith, who in the quiet security of his English study has been holding up the memory of that dashing soldier to scorn, could visit the spot, he would understand what a deed of daring it was. But enough for to day. Delhi is full of places and memories that fill one's heart with pride and admiration for the mighty deeds of those who fought for England in the dark days of 1857.

Good news for civilians in the Madras Presidency! With a foresight which shows true financial acumen, a bank is to be started designed to give greater facility to the public in regard to "loans," so when the hapless servant of Government, crushed by the depreciation of the rupee, the slowness of promotion, the increased expenses of living, the "little stranger," and the income-tax, comes to pecuniary grief, he can borrow money and jog along for a while till another financial storm sweeps him off the face of the official earth. A nice prospect for the "C.S." of modern India.

ROMAN CHARACTERS.

It is easy to think that the best with which we are most familiar, or to which we are most accustomed; and to nothing is this remark more strictly applicable than to language and its exponents. No one ever heard anybody confess that the language so dear to him from its early associations, that sanctified to memory by his mother's first words of affection and sympathy, and in which his own first childish prattle was stammeringly uttered, is not superior to all others. And, to a great extent, the same feeling prevails as to the characters employed to express words in writing. To go no further than Europe, you will fail in convincing most Germans that the detestable type in which their books are printed is not at least as clear and legible as the ordinary Latin character. Rismarck, as is well known, thinks it more so, maintaining that he can read in German typography in forty minutes what it would take him an hour to read in Latin characters. Yet the universal short-sightedness which prevails among the studious Teutons seems to an Englishman [a kind of revenge on Nature's part for the needless strain put on the eye by the persistent use of so grotesque a typography. Go further from home, and find yourself landed in the unchangeable East. You will rarely persuade an Oriental that writing from left to right is not incomparably more inconvenient than from right to left, or that printed vowels are not vastly inferior to vowel-points, any more than you will shake the contrary opinion entertained by Europeans.

Certain indications seem, however, to show, that what appears to us the unequalled simplicity of the Latin system of printing and writing, is, here and there, being recognised in even the Far East. Nothing, we suppose, will ever shake the invincible constancy to old customs and habits evinced by the Chinese, who enjoy the monopoly of perhaps as complicated a system of typography as any part of the world. Their next-door neighbours, the Japanese, who also labour under the disadvantage of an alphabet which requires years of needless toil to master it, are far more receptive of foreign "notions," and are beginning to awake to the fact that the said alphabet is not only in itself of no very great advantage to them, but is rather productive of positive evil, inasmuch as it places, especially as regards the acquisition of scientific knowledge, a barrier between themselves and foreign nations.

Accordingly, says the Civil and Military Gazette :—

The Japanese, in their thirst for knowledge, having found themselves not a little baulked by the clumsiness of the alphabets hitherto used for their written language, have apparently determined that this difficulty shall no longer hamper their intellectual progress; for a strong national movement has arisen in favour of the universal adoption of the Roman alphabet—though it is of foreign origin—as being simpler, clearer, and easier to master, than those to which they have been accustomed. Foreign science they have long fully appreciated, and they have now made up their minds to accept with it anything that may facilitate its acquisition and its dissemination. With a comparatively simple alphabet, the Japanese schoolboy will be able to save years from his "letters" to devote to the study of something worth knowing. The Roman alphabet, if by no means perfect, is an evident improvement on many, if not all other, national alphabets; and it is the chosen alphabet of nearly all the progressive nations of the world. It would be well if it, or some modification of it, were everywhere adopted; and if the patriotic feeling which opposes its introduction, and clings to "old forms," were reserved for other national heirlooms more worth preserving. A universal language would be a great convenience to all except a few linguists who would find their occupation gone; but the difficulties in the way of its attainment must keep it back from us awhile. A common alphabet would be a smaller, but a very real boon, and the obstacles in its way are of a lesser order. The educated leaders of thought in any country have only to give their decided voice in favour of a change with this object in view, as they are doing in Japan, and there is no doubt the change would speedily be wrought out.

The movement in Japan, so far as it has gone, has been, as we are led to believe, entirely spontaneous. And if, as we think there is reason to hope, a similar movement take place in India, it must be not less so. We think, from this point of view, that the subjoined anecdote is not a little curious, though the fact, that officers employed on railways should be unable to read the petitions of their subordinates, shows the superficial nature of whatever tests may be imposed.

Roman Urdu (we read) is gradually forcing itself to the front. A curious illustration has come to our notice. On the Harnai Railway, contractors and others, disgusted at the way in which munshis, unless duly bribed, purposely mis-read their petitions, have in some instances taken to writing their grievances in Roman Urdu, and giving their letters themselves into their officers' hands.

The conviction of the expediency of a change of character in certain cases is not confined to the "poor Petitioners."

For our contemporary has seen—

A small book on the Beluchi language by Rai Bahadur Hetu Ram. It consists of a short grammar, colloquial sentences and a vocabulary. The Beluchi portion is written in the Roman character.

It would, we may parenthetically observe, be a real benefit to the cause of science in India, were it found possible to adopt some uniform (possibly Latin) terminology in teaching it to persons using various dialects. We have not forgotten that the utility, for foreign students, of German scientific works used not to be improved by the habitual use of such abnormal names as Sauerstoff for oxygen, and Stickstoff for carbonic acid gas. This point appears to have been neglected. It seems ridiculous to be told that, in the Punjab for instance, the University has—

Taken great pains to invent different technical names for Hindi and Urdu text books on the same subject, with the result that Hindi and Urdu speaking persons, who understand one another perfectly in ordinary conversation, are unable to converse together on scientific subjects, because the technical terms to which they are severally accustomed are entirely different: surely a wasted ingenuity, commended neither by science nor by common sense.

It will probably be in technical phraseology that the Latin character will, in the first instance, come to the fore. That it will, eventually, be adopted by the educated classes, is more than likely: nor is it superfluous to point out the enormous advantage of having, among educated persons, a common medium of communication. The, doubtless well meaning, Native gentlemen, who speak of fusing the entire Indian population into one nation, could, surely, scarcely desire a better fulcrum on which to work.

THE BUNEYRWALS.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The lamented death of Colonel Hutchinson must not hurry us into a determination to indulge in a grand war with the Buneyr tribe, which the chief newspaper in the Punjab is evidently hankering after. A grand expedition would result in an increase to the Indian Income-tax, which is likely to press heavily on our friends and kinsmen, who are wearing out their energies in a tropical climate.

The Buneyrwals have displayed willingness to live at peace with us, but as their local government is of a very democratical kind, they find it difficult to restrain turbulent men, who raid across the Border into our territory. The best mode of preventing these raids is to make a good military road from Hoti-Murdan sixteen miles in a north-easterly direction to Roostum where a troop of Native Cavalry should be stationed. This road can be made at a very moderate cost; the raided villages are within six miles of Roostum; our cavalry at Roostum could always cut off the retreat of the raiders, and recover the stolen cattle. A severe example would deter others, the destruction of one party of robbers would strengthen the hands of the peaceable Boneyrees. A little money expended on military roads would enable our soldiers to secure the safety of our subjects, but when will you be able to induce English and Scotch statesmen to give their attention to military roads?

The war in 1863 in the Umbeyla Pass was caused by the bungling mismanagement of our Politicals. As soon as Major James arrived from England this disastrous war was brought to an end.—Your obedient servant, February 24th.

The attendance, owing to the inclement weather, probably, was not large, and consequently an adjournment of the meeting till a future early date was proposed and carried, for the purpose of maturing plans for carrying out the object in view. Resolutions were passed: "That such a Home and Refuge for Ayahs was an absolute necessity in London, and that a society be formed for the support of one," and that an appeal be made to Anglo-Indians and others interested in India to come forward and help in the establishment of such a Home.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pure and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

BROAD ARROW,

A Saturday Review and Journal particularly devoted to the Army, Navy, & Civil Service.

The "Broad Arrow" has long had by far the largest circulation of all the Military Papers. This results from the high character it has always sustained for early and exclusive intelligence, and for its earnest support of all measures or the good of the Services.

The "Broad Arrow" has a reputation for the high tone and independent course of its staff of writers, and articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study.

The "Broad Arrow," in addition to its home circulation, is also read extensively by officers of foreign services, especially of the German, French and American Army, and by foreign officials who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

The "Broad Arrow" devotes a considerable space to literary criticism, and special attention is given to works bearing upon the Services, the best writers obtainable contribute reviews upon current, including foreign, literature.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 9, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the 19th February; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 17th February; from Rangoon to the 12th February.

TELEGRAPHING from Rangoon on the 6th inst. the Times correspondent announces—what has come to be regarded as the first step in tranquillizing a subdued country—an amnesty. In a Proclamation, stating that henceforth “no Burmese Prince will ever again rule in Burma; the Queen Empress is Sovereign throughout the whole country, and all the people of Burma are now Her Majesty’s subjects,” Mr. Bernard announces “the firm intention of the Government to trample out dacoity, rebellion, and all crimes of violence at any cost.”

At the same time, it is not the desire of the Government that persons who have been misled by evil advisers should have no opportunity of forsaking a career of crime, and becoming peaceable citizens. All persons who are still opposing the British Government are hereby called upon to come in and lay down their arms, and return to a life of order and industry. As an act of special grace and favour, under the authority of his Excellency the Viceroy, all persons who have taken up arms against the Government in Upper Burma are assured that if they voluntarily surrender themselves to any British officer before the 30th of June, 1886, their lives will be spared, and they will be treated with such leniency as their case permits. The only exceptions to this offer of amnesty are the persons who were engaged in, or instigated, the murders of Messrs. Allen, Roberts, and Moncur at Mingin, and of Mr. Gray at Zyibin. Save in the case of notorious leaders of dacoits, a free pardon for all offences against the State committed before the issue of this proclamation will be granted to any person who voluntarily surrenders himself before that date.

All rebels and dacoits are hereby solemnly warned that if they do not avail themselves of the clemency now offered they will be pursued and dealt with according to law. The friends and relatives of persons suffering imprisonment for dacoity and rebellion are invited to co-operate with the authorities in restoring order. When disturbance shall have ceased dacoits and rebels now in prison may look for some mitigation of their punishment. As long as disturbances continue no hope of release can be held out to them.

It is reported that Upper Burma is to be administered under the Act of 32 Victoria, whereby it will become part of British India, but as what is known as a non-regulation Province, all the proposed laws for it being passed, not by legislation, but by the Governor-General in Council.

THE difficulties of speedily pacifying a jungly country of many hundred square miles, the immemorial hunting-ground of Dacoits, are illustrated by a telegram from Renter, received as we are going to press:—

RANGOON, March 8.

Yemethen, to the north of Myingyan, recently occupied by the British and garrisoned by 300 troops, has been surrounded by a force of about 9,000 rebels. The garrison have been ordered to entrench themselves and not to attempt to move out.

General Prendergast, who is at Toungoo, will leave for Yemethen to-morrow, escorted by a small force of 100 men. It is believed that he will have to fight his way, and a severe engagement may be looked for in a few days, when the General arrives at Yemethen.

A column of troops is being despatched from Mandalay to relieve the garrison.

LORD DUFFERIN, while at Madras, was “heckled” by deputations of all sorts and conditions of men, and had to be “on his P’s and Q’s.” Native Volunteer Corps, changes in the salt and forest laws, promotion of technical education, elected Native members in the Legislative Council, were but a few of the omnium gatherum of subjects urged on the Viceroy’s consideration. We are not astonished that his reply was “very guarded.” “With some of the suggestions made he could cordially agree. Others were of a very complicated character, touching on various fundamental points. Even upon these, however, he might not have remained silent, were it not that an inquiry was about to be instituted into the whole question of Indian administration. He made it a rule never to excite hopes which he could not be certain of fulfilling, nor to allow his views on most questions to become prematurely known. He would therefore content himself with saying that if his views were called for probably they would not be found out of harmony upon some important points with those of many wise, intelligent, and patriotic Native gentlemen.”

LORD DUFFERIN’S arrival at Calcutta has since been announced.

THE British Indian Association, a body representing the Bengal landholders, has addressed a somewhat remarkable petition to Parliament on the subject of the proposed Indian Committee. The main point made is that a sub-committee should be sent to take evidence in India, on the ground that if witnesses are examined only in London the data obtained will be extremely limited.

WE regret to read that there are some signs of the Government, for financial reasons, suspending its energy regarding the frontier defensive works. It is believed that the work on the larger bridges on the new frontier roads may be stopped for the present. We agree with the Times that such economy seems short-sighted, and it will probably only lead to heavy cost when the work has to be completed under the influence of the next scare. It is, however, satisfactory to know that the Bolan Railway has just been completed up the ghaut to the plateau near Durwaza.

TO-DAY will make at least one heart in India glad; for this is the day fixed for the restoration of Gwalior Fortress to its legitimate owner, the Maharajah Scindia.

THE Begum of Bhopal is expected to visit Calcutta shortly.

THE Viceroy will probably install the Maharajah of Cashmere when visiting Jummoo on his way to Simla.

THE Calcutta Corporation has refused to raise the house-rate to the maximum of 10 per cent. This is practically a refusal to carry out the sanitary reforms which the entire body of medical men in the city, the local Government, the Supreme Government, and the Secretary of State have pronounced absolutely necessary for the welfare of the town.

THE Pioneer confirms the Times of India as to the composition of the Finance Commission, which, it seems, is to be a “roving commission” visiting the “headquarters of expenditure,” and is by no means to be confined to sitting at Simla. This is well, as it will be able to procure local evidence on points affecting local interests, and it will in some degree compensate for the absence of a larger non-official element. The members are to be:—President, Mr. C. A. Elliott, Chief Commissioner of Assam; members, Hon. Mr. Justice Cunningham, Hon. Dr. W. W. Hunter, Hon. Rao Bahadur Mahadeo Govind Ranade, Mr. J. Westland, Comptroller-General; Lieutenant-Colonel Filgate, Accountant-General, Public Works Department; Mr. H. W. Bliss, Salt and Abkari Commissioner, Madras; Mr. Robert Hardie, Secretary and Treasurer, Bank of Bengal.

THE change in the plans of the Government of India as to the selection of a permanent domicile for King Thebaw is understood to have been chiefly owing to the desire to keep his Majesty at a safe distance from the blandishments of Pondicherry. Ranipett is but eighty miles across country from the nearest point of French territory; whereas Rutnagherry is four hundred miles from Maté.

WE learn from Meshed, under date 5th, that Sir W. Ridgeway, with Major Durand and Captains Yate and Maitland, was to leave on the 6th to join the Russian Commissioner at Meruchak and resume the demarcation survey. Spring weather has set in. Mr. Ney Elias, who has travelled from India by Kashgar, Shiguan, Roshan, and Badakshan, has joined Sir W. Ridgeway.

WE "all know," says the Secretary for War, when receiving, on the 4th instant, a deputation urging an increased capitation grant to the volunteers, "what large expenditures of an abnormal kind are at present required for both the services for re-armament." What a queer "deputation"! Had no one his wits sufficiently about him to remind Mr. Campbell-Bannerman that at this very time of "large expenditures of an abnormal kind for re-armament," he is sending away, by hundreds, skilled artisans both from Enfield and from Woolwich?

AND by what means are our starving workmen being ousted? By contracts given to foreign firms. Result, useless swords, still more useless bayonets, British soldiers sent to the slaughter practically unarmed. It is not for nothing that "Brummagem" is represented in Parliament.

WRITING a week or two ago, the Madras Mail did not approve of the sanction given by the Government to the Russian representative to examine the frontier defences. Our contemporary thinks that "probable housebreakers should not be permitted to examine the key and lock of one's money safe. The Russian Government is ably represented among the Foreign officers, and its representatives will be all eyes and ears on the frontier. That Government does not allow British officers to go about the Caucasus, or to visit Sarrahs, or Merv. It is not deficient in courtesy, but it lets its neighbours clearly understand that no trespassers are allowed, under any pretext, to see for themselves what its agents are doing. The intimation by Lord Dufferin, in the gracious manner that comes so natural to him, that, to prevent misconception the British Government had rather that the visitors confined their rambles to show places in India, should have been sufficient to prevent the request being made, which has been, we think, weakly yielded to. It is idle to pretend that we do not imagine that Russia has any designs upon India. The fortifications are being erected for the warm reception of Russians as enemies, not for the hospitable entertainment of wide-awake Russian officers as momentary friends."

WE entirely agree with our contemporary, who has, in fact, expressed our own views as already set forth in these columns. But he hardly goes far enough. The one thing—there is no chance of obtaining it from those who adore Divine figures (Icons, we suppose,) from the North, but which a Conservative Government ought not to have neglected—to be aimed at is the establishment of Consulates at all important points in Russian Central Asia. Why are we to have no authentic knowledge of Russian proceedings? Why are we to be utterly ignorant how many bricks the Tsar is pulling down in the wall which divides his garden from our own?

THE fortnightly Tea Circular of Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson, dated 4th March, 38, Mincing-lane, states:—

About 35,500 packages have been offered during the fortnight; 3,800 of these being Ceylon, and 1,000 packages reprinted tea. There has been no fresh feature of any importance; the auctions for the most part having passed with a steady tone, at very regular prices. Our last telegram from Calcutta states that the total shipment will be 66 million lbs.

THERE is now no doubt of the success of the movement for despatching an Indian volunteer team to Wimbledon, a movement which failed last year solely because no one would stir in the matter until it was too late to collect funds. Adequate sums to cover all expenses have now been subscribed. We wish the team every success; that it will be cordially received need not be said.

AN old Madras gunner, says the United Service Gazette, writes as follows to a contemporary on the subject of the Royal Artillery sword-bayonets:—

I send you an extract from the Pioneer Mail, which may be of interest to some of your readers; "Rangoon, January 27.—An eye-witness of the recent fight with the Shans in the Shoaygyeen district states: "Major Robinson, with a party of twenty gunners and fifty Sepoys, advanced to attack 700 Shans," &c. He then states: "All the gunners' swords were broken or damaged." Surely these swords could not have been tested before they were served out to the men.

Whom, may we ask, are we to hang? Suppose the enemy had been Russians instead of Shan dacoits?

WHY were not steps taken long since to overcome the unwillingness of the Chinese to allow commercial intercourse between India and Tibet? However, better late than never, and we are pleased to read (in the Civil and Military Gazette) that a mission to Lhasa will probably be sanctioned as a result of Mr. Colman Macaulay's recent mission to Peking.

WE have not, it would seem, heard quite the last of the Indian "Delegates," but the remarks on the subject made in Native journals are not always as sensible as the subjoined from the Indian Mirror:—

While the Russian scare is still hovering over us, though faintly, the narratives of the Indian delegates as to what they did, and what was done with regard to them in England, will produce a most beneficial effect in this country. From what we have heard, we can say without the least intention of flattery, that India could not possibly have been governed by a better nation than Englishmen. But it is the Englishmen in England who, by their unselfish and genuine generosity, command our respect and affection. Not the Anglo-Indians, as a rule. It is true that some few of the latter class sustain the great character of their countrymen for generosity, and that they alone confirm Native loyalty and attachment to English rule. Indeed, they are the pillars, which support the English Empire in India—the links that connect India closely with England. When we think of them, and the good that England has done for India, we are almost disposed to forget our wrongs, and we would, perhaps, have forgotten them, but for the fact that such wrongs are frequently repeated by members of their body. If the whole Anglo-Indian community were composed of men like the few exceptional Englishmen we meet with in this country, a European army would hardly have been needed in India.

THE relations between the Government and the Native Press do not please the Kaisar-i-Hind:—

WE think (says this paper) it is now high time that something should be done to keep the Indian authorities better informed on what is going on in the Native circle. There is a translation department in each of the three Presidencies, which supply to Government what is supposed to be translations from the Native papers. But we have no means to ascertain the correctness or otherwise of these representations. The proceedings of the reporter on the Native Press are enveloped in darkness, which, we believe, is a mistake. There would be no harm in laying before the public the translations as supplied to Government. We would then be in a position to know what subjects have reached the ears of those concerned. The Native papers of the mofussil often publish instances of misgovernment in the zillahs which, if properly reported, would keep the misdoers in check.

LITTLE hope as we may have that the general feeling of Europeans and Natives in India will, in the matter of the import duties, prevail against the interests of the Manchester manufacturers, we cordially sympathise with the Indian view of the subject, and are well-pleased to see that it is so strongly advocated by the Native journals. The Dayan Prakash says:—

Our contemporary of the Times of India in an excellent leader supports the view taken by the Rao Sahib Mandlik. We are certain that no Indian Government will ever make bold to reimpose the import duties and to incur the displeasure of Manchester. But that is no reason why we should not agitate for the reimposition of the duties in question. "But if that astute leader, the Rao Sahib," remarks our contemporary, "is really able to arouse all the Native associations to speech and action, the agitation may possibly assume larger proportions than are expected." All political economists are agreed as to the desirability of levying import duties for the sake of revenue, if not for protection, and we fail to see why the Indian Government should hesitate to adopt this line of conduct in a financial emergency and crisis like the present. Indirect taxes should be always safely trusted as good agents in revenue matters in a country like India, and we cannot but come to the conclusion that the import duties are not levied simply with a view to avoid the danger of injuring the vested interests of Manchester.

A VERY temperately written article on the same subject in the Hindu justly says :—

On the desirability of reimposing these duties there is singular unanimity between the Native community and non-official Europeans. The latter advocate it, because it would save them from the income-tax, while the former believe that the condition of the country is such that it cannot forego such a fruitful source of revenue. But it is a question on which there may be difference of opinion, whether, if the choice lies between the two means of additional revenue, the reimposition of the import duties or an income-tax is to be preferred. For our part, we have never shared in the sentimental objection to all direct taxation in India. The former unpopularity of the income-tax is, in our humble opinion, more or less a fiction, so far as the Natives were concerned; and even now we have a firm belief that under careful management the income-tax will work smoothly. Mr. Hope's speech throws valuable light on the general question of the suitability of direct taxation in India.

FROM Zanzibar it is reported that a joint French and German Commission is about to "delimitate" the Sultan's possessions on the east coast of Africa. Is England to have no word to say in this matter? Our interests in Zanzibar probably quintuple those of all other nations together.

It is difficult not to agree with the following remarks of the Calcutta Englishman :—

There is now in Calcutta quite a colony of refugees from Nepal, driven out by the late revolution. At present they are in decent circumstances, but the money they have is not likely to last long, seeing that they are living entirely on capital; and, of course, the change in their position is very marked. Several of them are closely related to the late Jung Bahadur, and naturally look to the Government of India for some assistance in recognition of the services rendered by the great Nepalese Minister. It certainly seems a somewhat ungenerous return for the zealous loyalty of Jung Bahadur that we should look coldly on and allow his family to be disinherited by the sons of our traditional enemy without a word of protest. There would be no occasion for any armed intervention; but a strong word in season would doubtless have its effect with a man like Bhir Shumshere Jung, who knows that he has the best of reasons to propitiate the Government of India. Nepal is not a rich country, but the usurpers, as a matter of expediency, if not of decency, might be called upon to allow some compensation to those whom they have so cruelly dispossessed.

WE have been asked to inform our readers that the meeting to further discuss the question of the formation of a society for carrying on an Ayahs' Home in London (in lieu of Rogers's Home), adjourned from Monday, March 1—as mentioned in our last issue—is fixed to take place on Wednesday next, the 10th inst., at 4 p.m., at the office of the Indian Female School and Zenana Society, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand. We trust there will be a goodly gathering of Anglo-Indian friends of the cause, and that the proposed society may be fully organized.

Chit Chat.

THERE seems every likelihood that Lord Reay will come back to England, as the climate of Bombay does not agree with him. But will a return to the lesser flights of home life agree with the fair lady who shares the royal dignities of Government House?

To Mr. Needham, Assistant Political Officer at Sadiya, belongs the credit of having been the first Englishman who has ever succeeded in penetrating the Mishmi country. All honour to the adventurous spirit which prompted and carried through an enterprise fraught with no inconsiderable degree of danger.

"BURMA for the Burmans" is the new-fangled cry of the day. But listen to the language of the Chief Commissioner :—"Mr. Bernard in no way contends that the average of Burmese magistrates and police are as clever, as plucky, and as upright as the average of English, Bengali, and Australian, Canadian or Punjabi magistrates and police officers would be. But in these respects he hopes that Burmese officials will improve. Very marked improvement in probity, in mental culture, and in regard for the rights of the poor, have been among the results of a generation or two of English education in Bengal and Bombay."

Precisely so; let the Burmans wait two generations, and there will be time enough to consider whether they are fit to be entrusted with powers of government. Meanwhile Englishmen must do what the Natives of that country cannot do for themselves, viz., look after matters for the next sixty years.

CALCUTTA milk is described as a disgrace to a civilized community. What must the compound used in London under that name be termed?

A "GHARRIWALLAH" (cabman) of Calcutta, charged with having murdered a man, has been convicted of "causing grievous hurt." But surely death is something more than "grievous hurt?" But after a recent notable case, any peculiarity of law is credible.

THE Congo is certainly a mighty river. At its mouth it is seven miles wide. At fifty miles from land the water is no more than brackish, while the sea is discoloured to the distance of 100 miles; more than this, the influence of the river current is felt for the surprising stretch of 200 miles from the embouchure: but these results, marvellous as they are, must yield the palm to the fact that the river disgorges floating islands into the ocean.

The following extract from the Times of India will be read with interest by many an Anglo-Indian :—"Death has been busy of late among the little coterie who have for long been accustomed to dine on Sundays in the Oriental Corner of the Athenæum Club. Of the five or six who were the most frequent Sunday diners, three have been gathered within the last few months. W. Vaux, late of the British Museum Coin and Medal Department, and Secretary to the Royal Asiatic Society; Sir Arthur Phayre, late Chief Commissioner of British Burma; while James Fergusson, the Indian Archaeologist, was struck down with paralysis about three weeks ago. The other Sunday diners are A. Grote, late member of Board of Revenue and President Asiatic Society of Bengal; Nassau Lees; Edward Thomas, the Numismatist, who has since, by the way, gone over to the majority; and any distinguished savant in Oriental lore, such as Mr. Burgess, who might be at home, and a member of the Club. The other Corner had its Sunday occupants also, and death has not passed them over. They were generally, Hayward, the reviewer and raconteur, Chinnery, the editor of the Times, Whumby, the Kinglake, and Cartwright, the member of Parliament, of whom the two first have been taken."

AN American enthusiast has proposed to "dam up" the gulf stream which washes the coast of Labrador. Should this be done it is supposed the British Isles would be affected, and ultimately become as cold as the Arctic regions. Nice this for those who live to see it!

THE wave of cold which has reached our coasts seems to have touched the shores of Bombay, where the pinched faces and shivering forms of the Natives proclaim the misery of their state. Yet for all that the thermometer has not fallen lower than 60 degrees of Fahrenheit.

A VERY successful public meeting of the Hindu inhabitants of Aligarh was held on Sunday, Feb. 14th, to consider the infant marriage question. Raja Jaikissen Doss Bahadur presided. Three resolutions proposed by leading pundits and others were carried unanimously to the effect that infant marriage be stopped by all possible means, if not done by the support of Government; that unequal marriage be strictly prohibited; and that a working committee be formed to co-operate with Mr. Malabari.

A LARGELY attended meeting of Volunteers was held at Ran-goon on Saturday, February 13, when it was resolved to send a deputation to the Viceroy, on his return, to ask for increased privileges for Volunteers, including exemption from the income-tax, to the same extent as the Regular Forces, a free passage to England and back for every Volunteer after ten years' consecutive efficiency, with accommodation according to rank. Colonel Vansomer, Major Rigg, Captains Bliss and Samuel, Dr. Marks, Lieutenants Dickie and Wooten were appointed a committee to draw up a memorial and to form a deputation to wait on the Viceroy with the same.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE CHERSONESE WITH THE GILDING OFF.*

Magnificent jungle, dotted with flowering palms, and studded with every variety of tree which can add beauty and charm to a tropical scene; picturesque lakes relieving the dull monotony of an unbroken expanse of forest, winding rivers, bearing on their bosom the fanciful boats which grace the waters of the Malay States—this is the Chersonese with the gilding on. A series of mud-swamps, filled with “iridescent slime,” a “butcherless, bakerless, tailorless, cobblerless, doctorless, bookless, milkless, postless, and altogether comfortless jungle;” leaky, ill-arranged, ill-ventilated, pestilential dens, called boats, filled with vermin and low-caste Chinamen and Malays. This is the Chersonese with the gilding off. Of the former, the Prophet and Apostle is Miss Bird, the latter is the adopted child of Mrs. Innes. Both ladies are doubtless truthful. How comes it, then, that the account given by them is as divergent as the stars of heaven above and the earth beneath? The answer is simple. A country seems to a traveller pretty much according to the opportunities presented of gaining information. When viewed from the deck of a well-equipped vessel, gliding comfortably and gracefully along the broader rivers, it presents a very different aspect compared with the experiences of those who are destined to “live and move and have their being” in the midst of a pestilential mud swamp, teeming with miasma, and peopled with beings in the lowest scale of humanity. Such was Langat, where Mrs. Innes, after enduring the miseries of a trip by native boat, alighted safe and sound in the year of grace 1876, to join her husband, who had just been appointed collector and magistrate. Circumstances were certainly not favourable at the commencement—the home was rickety, and so ill-designed to stand the rains that in a storm recourse was necessary to goloshes when the Mem Sahib had occasion to go from one room to another. Mosquitoes—and such mosquitoes—invented for the occasion, flew about by myriads; ants swarmed in such numbers that food had to be kept in dishes constructed with legs, which latter were always standing in a basin of water. To complete the discomfort, now and again a tiger prowled round the rooms; these, with one exception, being doorless, the only chance of defence was the valour of the guard of soldiers which patrolled the grounds; but as these worthies invariably decamped whenever danger threatened, the security was more imaginary than real. Then as to the people. There were low Chinamen and insolent Malays, bad-mannered men and worse-mannered women, dirty servants and dirtier underlings, but both endowed with thievish propensities, “swells” who eat with their fingers, cooks who cut bread and their toe-nails with the same knife, a populace so ignorant that they fancy the population of England to consist of but twelve or fourteen persons, and so peculiar in their notions that they began to despise Her Most Gracious Majesty, Queen of these Realms, when they understood that she could read and write; boys so accustomed to wallow in mud that they none of them had ever seen a stone, Chinamen so filthy and unclean that their presence can be traced by the perfume which precedes them, and withal so dandified that they wore a false pig-tail in addition to the veritable and true appanage; finally, Mahometans so bigoted that they will not wash a plate touched by European hands, and yet so lax that they will quaff champagne by the bottle on the ground that had that delicious beverage been invented in the Prophet’s time he would have allowed his followers to partake thereof as being so nice.

The picture is not enchanting, but Mrs. Innes, evidently one of Nature’s ministering angels sent into this world to be a “help-meat for man,” succeeded during her stay of four years in materially mending matters; her presence and example seemed to throw life and energy into the indolent, cleanliness took the place of dirt and filth, the house was furnished up, food was imported from the stores—the hated stores in Old England—a piano lent additional civilisation to the scene of loneliness and misery; while, to crown all, a lawn-tennis ground lent that charm which this now national game imparts whenever and wherever Albion’s sons can smoothe a waste and level a mound. Then neglected flowers were guarded and protected, paths were beaten and kept free of the long jungle grass of the tropics, social intercourse with the better representatives of humanity took the place of the evening lounge of the large cities—in short, life became bearable.

But a change came over the spirit of the scene—a new Government house was constructed in a most lovely spot on a hill, and a little paradise soon sprang up in the midst of the impenetrable mass of forest. This was too good a chance to be neglected, so the Resident packed off Mr. Innes to another sphere of action, and allotted the favoured spot to a more favoured friend. The star of the Innes family now began to decline—ill-health, worry, despair, all combined to wreak their wicked vengeance upon the poor inoffensive collector. For a while he struggled bravely, but at last he could bear up no longer, and sending in his resignation, which, needless to say, was promptly accepted, six years of life were wasted—but no, the public are the richer by one of the quaintest, most unaffected, and none the less most interesting books which it often has a chance of reading. We must hope that Mrs. Innes will again essay the flights of literature, and give an account of her experiences in her new capacity of a tea-planter’s wife, for to this employment Mr. Innes appears to have turned his attention. May success attend his efforts, and this time may it be tea with the gilding on!

MYTHICAL MONSTERS.*

This book should, we think, have been called, Non-mythical Monsters, though the title-page might have been less strictly alliterative; for the author “rehabilitates,” if the phrase may be used, the actual existence of many animals (hitherto thought to be purely creatures of invention) whose sphere of action has been supposed to be “in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth.”

Mr. Gould strikes the key-note of the tone which he intends to adopt when he says in his Introduction, “For me the major part of these creatures are not chimeras, but objects of rational study.” Again, “Surely a profound acquaintance with the different branches of natural history should render a man credulous rather than incredulous, for there is hardly conceivable a creature so monstrous that it may not be paralleled by existing ones in everyday life”—(p. 17). To the animals of the pristine world we may safely apply Ovid’s words:—

“Of none the form was permanent, of all
The figure changeful, whether great or small.”

To begin with animals of which we have types smaller than existed in ancient times, there is evidence enough and to spare that the larger forms existed. The most elementary work on geology shows that these creatures are found intact, not only as to skeleton, but as to flesh, skin, and even hair, in the ever-frozen wastes of Siberia. In the earlier ages of the world the saying was not true of man only that “there were giants in the earth in those days.”

Mr. Gould’s first chapter deals with “remarkable animal forms;” and here, again, we have to consider, whether their characteristics are or are not, so abnormal as to render a belief in their existence impossible. That bats and flying lizards were, on a small scale, the prototype of the winged dragon can hardly be doubted (p. 34) any more than it is possible to deny the probability that endless varieties of these monsters—to whom three entire chapters (pp. 159–260) are devoted—existed.

The extinction of a species, in all its varieties, naturally presupposes its existence; and this is well brought out in the chapter (No. 2) on this subject, “That some at least of the so-called myths respecting extraordinary creatures, hitherto considered fabulous, may be merely distorted accounts—traditions—of species, as yet unrecognised by science which, have actually existed, and that not remotely, as man’s congener,” is a proposition, wide indeed in its scope, yet which no careful inquirer would seriously deny.”

It is, perhaps, owing to a natural sequence of ideas that we find the next chapter devoted to the presumed antiquity of man. Taking as his text-book (p. 95) Mr. J. Geikie’s “Prehistoric Europe,” our author divides the prehistoric races according to the implements used by them, as betokening a less or greater degree of what we must, for want of a better word, call civilization. Geological investigation has shown, that the implements of the earliest workers in stone are found in the same strata as the remains of the mammoth, while those of their successors find a place with animals “essentially the same as those still occupying” the earth.

The universal belief in the Deluge is thoughtfully considered by Mr. Gould in the Essay on the subject which forms his fourth chapter, “the Deluge not a Myth.” He remarks incidentally on the extinction of species which continues to the present day, observing, that the less remarkable would expire unnoticed, while any sudden destruction of “those distinguished by their size, ferocity, and dangerous qualities would attract attention. . . . Amongst the most fell destroyers, both of species and of their history, must,” he continues, “have been the widespread, although not universal, inundation known as the Biblical deluge;” and an inundation which obliterates at once habitations, quadrupeds, and most of the inhabitants, would undoubtedly not soon fade from out the traditions of any people. It is to the universality of the tradition of such an exceptional event that we must, outside Revelation, look for evidence of its truth.

Another Scriptural animal, the unicorn, is dealt with; and, acting on the same principle, “Quod ubique, quod ab omnibus,” we must say that Mr. Gould makes out, in our opinion, a very strong case for the probability of the existence of such a beast. Cæsar’s testimony as to its existence in Germany (p. 341) is at best but hearsay, but the narratives of some of the Jesuits seem to indicate that they had actually seen the monoceros; while Baron von Müller, in 1848, was offered for sale in Kordofan an animal (also mentioned by the well-known German traveller Rüppel) under the name, a'nassa, of "the size of a small donkey; (it) has a thick body and thin bones, coarse hair, and tail like a boar; it has a long horn on its forehead, and lets it hang when alone, but erects it immediately on seeing an enemy." Chinese writers also allude to a similar animal, and it is not a little remarkable that so careful an investigator as the late Brian Hodgson, who so long and so worthily represented us at Khatmandu, should have considered himself justified in sending to Calcutta, as the skin of the unicorn, that of an animal which (p. 346) had died in the menagerie of the Maharajah of Nepal; but we are inclined to agree with our author (p. 364) that, in all probability, "the unicorn may be merely a hybrid produced occasionally, and at more or less rare intervals." Perhaps, like mules and other hybrids, it may be incapable of propagation.

No account of Mythical Monsters would be complete without a notice of the (so-called mythical) sea-serpent. Here we at once leave ancient narratives (of which there is, however, no lack), for the most recent which we can obtain. And the number and circumstantiality of these is really astonishing. In Norway (pp. 272 to 282), in Wales (p. 287), as well as in warmer latitudes (pp. 292, &c.), we find enormous reptiles, of lengths stated, usually, at from 60 to 90 feet, which have been seen by experienced sailors, by those most accurate of all observers, medical men of high position (p. 295), and by intelligent officers of the army (p. 302).

On this head we are disposed to agree with the Editor of the "Zoologist," who says:—"I have long since expressed my firm conviction that there exists a large marine animal unknown to us naturalists; I maintain this belief as firmly as ever. I totally reject the evidence of published representations; but I do not allow these imaginary figures to interfere with a firm conviction."

In conclusion, we must congratulate Mr. Gould on the industry and research which he has displayed, and on the ability with which he has dealt with the facts elicited by him. He has produced a book the conclusions of which will, we think, be generally accepted. But even those, who are not prepared to admit them all, will none the less thank the author for an interesting and valuable work.

Mr. CROLE, a Madras civilian, seems in trouble. First of all he was sent to an unhealthy station, so at least it is alleged, for insubordination to the Board of Revenue; since that date he has been suspended for a twelvemonth, owing to his having made charges against a high official which were not considered to have been substantiated. The only thing that seems strange is that a person should be sent to a place where he may die should he disagree with, or comport himself improperly towards, his official superiors.

PAPER MAKING IN INDIA.

In days when private, and even railway, carriages are made of paper, and when it enters so largely into manufacturing of almost every description, it seems anomalous to be told that a country like India, which, as Dr. Balfour's invaluable Cyclopaedia reminds us, possesses no less than 121 varieties of plants from which paper can be made, boasts of but six or seven steam paper mills.

Up to 1840, China to a great extent supplied India with paper, but the manufacture in the Peninsula itself gradually took root, and promised well. Indeed, both Mahomedans and Hindoos, who use an Indian ink, still largely write on Indian-made glazed paper. "But the order of the Home Government, during Sir Charles Wood's tenure of the office of Secretary of State, that all supplies should be purchased in Great Britain, throw back the paper trade, and many others, causing great financial losses to the Indian Government. It was a concession to the interests of English manufacturers, at the expense of India, similar to the more recent instance of the abolition of the duty on cotton goods.

So entirely was the trade ruined, that, only last autumn, an officer on the Afghan Boundary Commission wrote to an Indian contemporary from Kuhsan on Russian paper. Surely, Indian paper mills could afford to sell paper there cheaper than the Russians.

It is not too much to say that the plants indigenous to, or easily reared in, India are among the very best adapted to this manufacture. The well-known paper plant of Nepal (closely akin to another plant of the same genus, which is found in great abundance in many parts of Southern India), produces paper which was reported by an engraver to afford "finer impressions than any English-made paper, and nearly as good as the fine Chinese paper which is employed for what are called India-paper proofs."

The Japanese paper, too, so celebrated, and so variously used, is made from a plant by no means uncommon in India.

Japanese paper, made from a plant, the Broussonettia papyrifera, or paper mulberry tree, which is by no means rare (and the cultivation of which could easily be extended) in India, will, says Dr. Balfour, better endure folding, and will last longer, than any made in Europe. In Japan it is employed to form "the walls of rooms, and the fans in universal use, as wrapping paper, and forms the string to tie it; in square pieces it is used as pocket-handkerchiefs, and pressed together and lacquered it is worn as hats. It is of every consistency, but always tough; it is impossible to tear it against the grain. Some of it is as soft and flexible as cotton cloth . . . that used for handkerchiefs might be mistaken for cloth so far as toughness and flexibility are concerned. Paper of Japan is also applied in lieu of glass on the sliding walls of the houses . . . for napkins, tablecloths, waistcoats, and other articles of apparel."

Now, what can be done in Japan with this Broussonettia can undoubtedly be done in India. At present Paper is made, in Western India, at Surat, Ahmedabad, Dharwar, Kolhapoor, and Aruugabad, the last-named bearing the palm as to fineness and gloss, and being in great demand at Native Courts. But there is room for an immense development of the manufacture, and we are glad to see that this fact is beginning to be recognised. We read the other day in the Scottish News:—

It may seem surprising, that although paper-making has been in vogue in China since the beginning of the Christian era, and practised over the whole of Europe for nearly ten centuries, India is only now beginning to take an active interest in the subject; but, as this and similar movements may have the effect of increasing the demand for machinery at home, the bright outlook for the engineering trade becomes a first consideration. In the United Kingdom there are about 350 paper mills, but in India, where there is a population of 240,000,000—that is, eight times as many inhabitants as in the United Kingdom—there are only as yet some seven mills. Three of these are situated in the Bombay Presidency, two in Bengal, and two in the North, in the province of Oudh. Esparto grass, rags, straw, and wood pulp are used in this country in the manufacture of paper; but in India, while rags are also utilised, the Native grasses, which grow in great profusion in some districts, and are easily obtainable, form the principal raw material, together with jute waste and roots formerly thrown into the rivers. Labour being cheap, there is no reason why this new industry should not thrive, so that on the whole there is good ground for concluding that the old country may look to India for much future trade in machinery as well as in other things.

A considerable impetus might well be given to Indian paper-making, as to many another nascent industry in India, were the Government to procure the withdrawal of Sir C. Wood's absurd order. There may be, in fact we know that there are, many articles which are best supplied from England. And these should continue to be thus supplied. But there are also many which India can produce, of equal quality with those procurable from England, and at a far lower price. It is not very long since one of our Indian contemporaries showed at length how large a percentage of saving had been effected whenever the Government of India was at liberty to disregard the preposterous restriction. And it is not too much to expect from that Government that, while insisting on the strictest economy, they should themselves set the example of it by purchasing in the cheapest, rather than in the dearest, market. At a time when, notwithstanding the depression of trade, it has been found requisite to impose fresh taxation, and when many of the ancient industries of the country are, like the beautiful Bidri ware, disappearing, it would, too, seem the duty of the powers that be to encourage, so far as their legitimate patronage extends, any nascent industry which may come under their notice, thus alleviating at least some of the widely spread distress. Of these rising industries the manufacture of paper is but one; though the article is one consumed on an enormous scale by the Government, and one to the production of which their "custom" would give fresh life. The principle, however, of "encouraging"—not by artificial tariffs, but—by legitimate Government patronage, "Native industry" is of very far-reaching application, and one which it is not sound policy to disregard in our dealings with the populations of our splendid Eastern dependency.

THE "India List, Civil and Military." Issued by permission of the Secretary of State in Council. London: W. H. Allen and Co. January, 1886.—This present issue of this Guide to the Indian Services displays the accuracy and fulness of detail to which we have been accustomed, and which has long rendered the "India List" a familiar work in the houses of all persons who are in any way interested in matters Indian, and in those through whose agency the Government of India is carried on.

OBITUARY.

SIR HENRY RICKETTS, K.C.S.I.

We regret to announce the death of Sir Henry Ricketts, K.C.S.I., which has just taken place at Surbiton. He entered the Bengal Civil Service in 1821. From 1827 to 1839 he held office in the province of Orissa, which, in 1831 and 1832, was visited by two terrible cyclones, accompanied by a fearful loss of life and by famine. Mr. Ricketts did everything that was possible for the relief of the distressed people, and received the highest acknowledgments of the Government. He was also employed in military operations in the Tributary States; and in 1836 was sent with two regiments of Native Infantry to co-operate with a large force in suppressing an insurrection among the Khoonds in the Goomsoor territory. It was at this time that Mr. Ricketts endeavoured to put a stop to the practice of human sacrifice among the Khoonds, and he rescued several children who were being reared for this purpose. In 1854 he was nominated Provincial Member of Council, but as no vacancy occurred till 1857, the year of the Mutiny, Mr. Ricketts recommended that a military man should be preferred to him, and Sir James Outram filled the post; while Mr. Ricketts continued to retain his position as a Special Commissioner for the revision of civil salaries. Eventually Mr. Ricketts entered the Council in 1858, and Lord Canning offered to appoint him Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Provinces, but he declined this offer on the ground that a member of the North-West Civil Service should be preferred to a Bengal officer. As a member of Council he worked indefatigably in aid of Lord Canning, and when, owing to failing health, he was obliged to inform Lord Canning of his intention to resign, Lord Canning wrote to him thus:—"I have received your note with very great sorrow, because of all the colleagues with whom I have ever been associated in public services, here or elsewhere, I have known none whose earnest, single-hearted, able co-operation has been more agreeable to receive, or more useful, than yours." Mr. Ricketts retired in 1860, after nearly thirty-nine years' service in India, and in 1866 he was made a K.C.S.I.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL T. F. WILSON, C.B.

The death of this officer, a few days before the expiration of his term of service as Military Member of the Viceroy's Council, removes another and not the least famous of the rapidly-thinning band of the heroes of the Indian Mutiny. As "the right-hand man of General Inglis" in the ever-memorable defence of the Residency at Lucknow, he deserves a niche in the temple of fame erected to the memory of English military achievements. General Wilson was born in or about the year 1820, and joined the army in 1838. For nineteen years he served without attracting any notice, and, although there were many important wars during that period, he attained no higher rank than that of Captain when the Mutiny broke out. Fortunately, he then attracted the attention of Sir Henry Lawrence, who, struck with his military knowledge and firm bearing, appointed him assistant adjutant-general. Colonel Malleon, in one of the happiest passages of his "Indian Mutiny," asserts that it "will not be possible to speak of the gallant defence of the beleaguered Residency without associating it in the mind with the name of Wilson." After the Mutiny Colonel Wilson was made an Aide-de-camp to the Queen, and received a C.B. But it was not for twenty years later that he again obtained an opportunity of distinguishing himself. This was in 1879, when, on the absence in India of General A. Johnson, Military Secretary at the India Office, he was appointed his locum tenens. It was generally believed at the time that this appointment was due to the notice attracted to his services by the publication of the "History of the Indian Mutiny." On General Johnson's return in 1881 to resume his functions at Westminster, General Wilson was appointed to fill the vacancy on the Viceroy's Council as military member in succession to Sir Edwin Johnson.

GENERAL R. G. TAYLOR, C.B., C.S.I.

One of "plain John Lawrence's" right-hand men has passed away in the person of this distinguished officer. General Reynell G. Taylor, C.B., C.S.I., died on Sunday week, at Ford Park, Newton Abbot. He was a son of the late Major-General T. W. Taylor, C.B., Lieutenant-Governor of Sandhurst, and was born in 1819. He entered the Bengal Army in 1840, became lieutenant-colonel in 1859, and colonel in 1863. He served in the Gwalior campaign in 1843, in the Sutlej campaign in 1854-6, and in the Punjab campaign in 1848-9, and was best known as Commissioner of the Umritsur Division in the Punjab, an office which he held for many years. He was promoted major-general in 1867, became lieutenant-general in 1877, and a general in 1882, in which year he was placed on the supernumerary unemployed list.

MURDER.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The government of the Punjab is at present consulting how the crime of murder can be checked in the six districts which adjoin Afghanistan. Our efforts hitherto have been wholly unavailing; there are just as many murders committed now as there were thirty years ago.

The cause is obvious; we are not en rapport with the people; we do not approve of their killing in revenge for the crime of adultery—they do not approve of our letting the licentious go free!

In former times Englishmen were just as determined to exact vengeance as the Pathans of the Peshawur district now are. We hoped that in duels the adulterer would be shot or disabled, but, when we discovered that he shot the injured husband in addition to seducing his wife, we abolished duelling. Since then adultery has not, I fear, diminished.

The bold and independent Pathans refuse to appeal to law when suffering under domestic injuries, and the law, when appealed to, will not do much for them; although by Regulation 1, of 1872, a special enactment for the six frontier districts, the unfaithful wife is liable to be imprisoned for five years.

The injured husband slays the adulterous couple if he can find an opportunity, and public opinion and public sympathy refuse to assist us in his condemnation and execution; so Act 4, of 1873, was enacted, by which Councils of Elders impose fines.

By the Statute 33 of Victoria, cap. iii. sec. 1, both men and women who are convicted of adultery should be rigorously imprisoned for one year, and banished out of the Punjab at the end of the term. As long as they remain near their homes their lives will be unsafe.—Your obedient servant,

March 5th.

COUGHES,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. G. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances decaying on analysis), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This system is necessary, as many persons receive purchases by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he is entitled to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, on doses generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states "A DOSE COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.
 To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
 DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances of the efficacy of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, T. Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patent alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBTLE IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists, 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, T. Russell St., W.C.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 16, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and papers from Bombay to the 26th February; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 24th February.

TELEGRAPHING from Calcutta on the 14th inst., the Times Correspondent reports Lord Dufferin's return to Calcutta, and the restoration of Gwalior to Maharajah Scindia as the two most important events of the week. Gwalior was restored without any pageant, the Maharajah being in bad health.

The ceremony (we read) was simple in the extreme. After the British flag had been saluted it was finally lowered, and the keys of the fortress were handed over by the commanding officer to Rajah Sir Gunput Rao Kirkey. Then, as Scindia's troops marched in the British garrison marched out, the band playing the appropriate air of "Tommy, make room for your uncle," and thus ended the twenty-eight years' occupation of this famous stronghold, on the same day, and almost at the same hour, on which the infinitely more important fort and city of Jhansi were transferred by Scindia to the Indian Government. The ceremony on that occasion was equally simple. The Subah formally made over his charge to the British Commissioner, who gave a receipt, Scindia's flag was saluted and lowered, the British flag was run up and saluted with thirty guns, and a party of the 40th Native Infantry then marched in and took possession.

It is expected that the Budget will be published this week. The Income-tax debate of some two months back has, however, much diminished the expectation of any novelty. The appearance in the Gazette of the Budget will herald the departure from Calcutta of the Viceroy, who will leave the City of Palaces about the 20th.

THE Begum of Bhopal and the Maharajah of Jeypore arrived in Calcutta last week, on a visit to the Viceroy.

THERE has long been some talk of an expedition, numbering some thousands of men, into the Boner Pass to punish the inhabitants for their raiding propensities. They seem to have taken the alarm, for we see that the tribe, which lately raided into British territory, has sent a deputation, saying that it is willing to pay a fine and restore the arms taken. It is doubtful whether it is only temporising till the wheat harvest has been gathered, and the weather has become too warm for the despatch of an expedition. The course to be taken has not yet been decided upon.

THE Maharajah of Cashmere has instituted an important reform, by abolishing all taxes and cesses upon land except the ordinary land revenue and the share of the general expenses of the village. The ordinary land-tax in Cashmere is half the gross produce. The remissions now made amount to from six to ten per cent., while the extra charges still retained amount to from two to three per cent. only.

THE Indian Press, especially the Native portion of it continues to express strong disapproval of the intrusting of the proposed inquiry into the administration of India to a Parliamentary Committee instead of to a Royal Commission. The main argument against the former is of course the fact that it will not take evidence in India, and undoubtedly the argument has much weight. The editors of the Anglo-Indian newspapers for the most part take the same view, and although they express themselves less strongly on the subject, they do not appear to expect much good from the labours of the Committee.

THERE is a similar general absence of any great expectations regarding the result of the Commission on the reduction of expenditure lately appointed by the Indian Government; while the composition of, and the instructions to, that Commission are severely criticised by several Native Associations and by nearly the whole body of the Native Press. Mr. Elliott, President of the Commission, is now in Calcutta, arranging the preliminary details. It is believed that he and his colleagues will assemble at Simla about the 10th of April.

We are glad to see so favourable a report as follows on the season's prospects of that important branch of agriculture, tea-planting:—

The reports from the tea districts (says the Correspondent) are generally good, and there is every prospect of an early season. Rain is wanted, according to the latest published reports, for the indigo crops, but the heavy general rain beginning last week probably did much good. The wheat crops continue to look promising. The Pioneer gives the following figures as the probable result of the wheat harvest in the North-West Provinces:—Taking 100 to denote a full average crop, this year's crop in Meerut, Agra, Allahabad, Benares and Jhansi is placed at 92, in Rohilcund at 95, in Fyzabad at 98, in Lucknow at 100, and in Rae Bareilly at 105. The corresponding figures for oilseeds range from 82 in Rohilcund to 100 in Rae Bareilly. The total yield of the opium crop is estimated at 75,000 chests, which will enable the Government to sell a large quantity next year, and yet to keep an unusually large reserve.

THE Native Press is still occupied with the Commission on Expenditure, and will not believe the Government to be making a sincere effort to reduce it. Says the Indian Spectator:—

The Government of India has no heart to retrench the overgrown expenditure of the Empire. Its insincerity is as transparent as daylight. And the sooner all organised public bodies send to Simla their united chorus of condemnation the better. Let them rather actively agitate, and that without a moment's delay, for a Royal Commission, as wisely insisted upon at the National Congress. In that Commission alone lies the hope of substantial reform of Indian administration. Let them ask for a Commission on which a statesman like Lord Hartington, a financier like Mr. Goschen, a great authority on agriculture like Sir James Caird, may be represented. We can then believe in the salvation of India to some reasonable extent. All else will be moonshine.

THE annual migration to Simla has always been a sore topic for would-be economists both in England and in India. We have never concealed our own views about it. The subject is one which will assuredly receive very close attention at the hands of the new Commission, whose raison d'être is economy. On this head the Indian Courier says:—

The bulk of the work used to be done at Calcutta. But the practice is quite different now. Besides the whole of all the Secretariats, many other officers are not wanting in good grounds for their being close at hand to the Government. The same observation may be made of all the subordinate governments and administrations. The cost is enormous. That cost must be saved to the State. We say that no more appropriate question could come before any Retrenchment Committee, and that the Indian Press and associations could not take up a more legitimate question for discussion.

THE Guzarat Mitra of Surat stands forth as an advocate of direct taxation:—

It is unquestionable that the Natives of India have been granted full security in respect of their lives, property, and their trades and occupations. They could much more safely amass wealth now than they did under Native rule, though it is also true that the civilised manners introduced amongst us have very civilly led to the extraction of wealth from India, without as civilly bringing in an equivalent wealth in return. But as far as direct taxation is concerned, this evil has no justification in the escape of those several lakhs of our community who earn a lot of money from the earnings—say we—of our masses! Sir Auckland could have very well said—"you luchas! you, who make large profits on the industries provided you from the accumulated efforts of the masses, grudge to pay a few shillings from the pounds you so surely and safely earn, while there is no poor man in the country, whose annual earnings hardly amount to more than a hundred or two hundred rupees, who either escapes indirect taxation, or direct, or both put together. While the poorer classes are, in numerous instances, both indirectly and directly taxed, it cannot be but a public disgrace to the country, that all classes, rising upwards from the tax-paying poorest, should escape the very tax which is perceptible and substantial for those who enjoy the benefits of a powerful Government that largely lives on land proceeds and salt and excise.

WE read in the Rangoon Gazette :—

A Burman who has recently returned from Upper Burma says Mandalay seems as quiet as Rangoon, whilst great improvements are taking place in the streets, and a tramway is being rapidly constructed between the river bank and the city. At all the principal places along the river people were coming in daily and surrendering their arms.

WHAT are we to think? Can it be possible that Indian tea is, after all, China tea? Yet what says the Bengal Times?—

Increase in the value of tea imported to India seems to be inexplicable. During eight months nearly 19½ lakhs worth of tea was imported to this country, which is able, during the same time, to export over three crores worth of tea of its own production.

It is as well to know that the representatives of Germany, Major von Hagenow and Baron Hühn, who were present at the manoeuvres in India, speak admiringly of what they saw, and that they have declared the Indian cavalry to be among the finest in the world, while the condition of the British military forces in India, they say, was a great surprise, not only to themselves, but to all the foreign officers, who were not prepared to find such a perfectly organised army as that recently assembled near Delhi. But one thing they all deprecated—the small number of European officers. They thought we were running a great risk.

At the meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute, held last Tuesday night at St. James's Hall, Mr. J. Annan Bryce read an interesting paper, before a large audience, on "Burma, the latest addition to the Empire." Mr. Bryce remarked that the country which we called by the generic name of Burma, and which had an area of about 230,000 square miles, or nearly three times the area of the United Kingdom, embraced several regions possessing considerable variety of physical and climatic conditions, while the products of the soil were equally varied. The attempt to attract immigration from Bengal had not been well managed. The best hope would be the teeming regions of Southern China, but now that China had become our immediate neighbour, there might not unreasonably exist some apprehension as to the political consequences of a large Chinese immigration. It was to be hoped that the Government would once more endeavour to secure a large immigration from India. Another want was improved land communication, and it would be an early duty of the Government to improve the communications. As to the circumstances which were the immediate occasion of the war, and which appeared to be little understood, it had been alleged that the Indian Government had no right to interfere on behalf of a private company, but the dispute of the King with the Bombay and Burma Trading Company had been going on for some months, without the Indian Government being asked to interfere. The dispute would have been settled without any interference, had not M. Haas, the French Consul, proposed to take the forests. A confidence in the support of the French emboldened the King to become more impracticable than ever, and it was then that the assistance of the Government of India was asked. It was impossible for the Government to permit the French to acquire the preponderating interest in the country which the possession of this and many other concessions actually granted would certainly have given. In conclusion, the lecturer said that Burma offered a fine field for English enterprise and capital, and it would probably continue in the future, as it had been in the past, the richest and most progressive Province of the Indian Empire.

WE gladly borrow from our contemporary, the Bengal Times, the following instance of Native self-devotion, thoroughly sympathising with the sentiments expressed. History records no more brilliant instance of self-sacrifice than that of Clive's Sepoys, who begged to be allowed to confine their rations to the water strained from the rice boiled for the European soldiers :—

This journal is always glad to record any incident, the perusal of which will draw Europeans and Natives closer together. We read the following instance of suffering uncomplainingly borne by our Native soldiers in Upper Burma. Two companies of the second Bengal Infantry that escorted a telegraph party from Laingha to Minhla last November had to march for four days over hilly ground in pouring rain. They had no tents or any other shelter and were forced to bear the inclemencies of the weather unprotected from its severity. Owing to a break-down of the Commissariat steamer they had to go without any rations for two days and a half; but these soldiers bore their privations manfully and never complained. A remark of one of the Sepoys was characteristic. "We had no food, but neither had the Sahib. It was the Sirdar's order that we should proceed, and so we did." This incident recalls to mind old Arcot days, when Sepoys under that splendid Commander Clive, fired by his magnanimity, gave the Shibs their boiled rice reserving for themselves the poor water in which it was boiled. This spirit has not died out altogether, let us hope.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—The India Council, says the Statist, was able to dispose of nearly 53 lacs of drafts upon India at Wednesday's allotment, but only at very low rates, notwithstanding the active season of the year and the high value of money in the Indian Markets. Nearly all the applications were for telegraphic transfers. At the allotment Rs.4,84,000 were taken in bills, and Rs.46,50,200 in transfers, special sales of Rs.1,57,000 in bills being subsequently announced. One lac of transfers realised 1s. 6 1-32d. per rupee, but with that exception 1s. 6d., the minimum accepted, was the highest price obtained, and no applicants at the price were refused. This week 50 lacs of Council Bills will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to March 9th inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.11,96,51,569, realising £9,118,277. To the corresponding date last year Rs.15,44,41,118, realising £12,453,260, had been disposed of.

Chit Chat.

At a recent election for the Syndics at the University of Bombay it was discovered that there were more votes than fell us. This looks awkward.

AN up-country Postmaster affords an amusing example of English as she is spoken. His chit runs thus :—"I beg most humbly and respectfully to report that from yesterday I have been very severely attacked with fever, and even now I am suffering under the same state. Last night the oil (arradi) vessel has been upturned by the rats and your honours posts to my greatest regretting, for this whole night has been mixed with oil. My contemplation and sorrow has no end. I very prostrate at your honours feet and beg pardon for the accident. What is to be done by doom of the Almighty shall any how be done and has the same come to pass, my Lords. In short I beg pardon for the accident. I had no good sense owing to the hardest fever Sirs. Pitying my convulsing state a favourable consideration on your honours parts will as my pitiable conscience says succeed above all. For your honours long, peaceful life and prosperity, in all duties bound, I beg most humbly and respectfully, your honours most obdt. and aff. st. "POSTMASTER."

THE Government of India have founded ten scholarships of £200 per annum, each tenable for three years, to enable Natives of India to pass an University career at Oxford or Cambridge. The scholarships in question are to be placed at the disposal of the Universities of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and the Punjab in rotation. There used to be a time when our dusky brethren were excluded from participation in any of the "plums" which the East can afford. Now the wheel of fortune has brought a complete change, and the Natives of India sit under the "Pagoda tree" basking in the sunshine of favour, and receiving concessions denied to their less fortunate brethren who are not of "Aryan" lineage.

To visit India on a three months' tour is nowadays a matter of no great difficulty, and if you chance to be the guest of the Viceroy no less agreeable than easy; but it is not very pleasant to find oneself one morning "lying rather seriously ill." Such has been the fate of Mr. Tennyson, the son of the Poet Laureate.

We live in active times. Scarce has India recovered from the throes of controversy regarding the Bengal Rent Bill than a similar measure is proposed for the Province of Oudh. This may be all very well, and the new proposals are possibly calculated to ensure relief to the suffering peasantry in the land of the Talukdars, but is the country to have no rest? Surely a little breathing time would be valuable and useful to all concerned? Railroad pace is now and again desirable and necessary, but to go on year after year in a whirl of exceptional legislation has its drawbacks, and indeed its dangers. The modern statesman is a veritable "Jehu," who drives the coach of State furiously. Let him beware that there be not an upset.

An impression seems to prevail that Government are in favour of continuing the forest leases of the Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation. If so, the shareholders in that lucky concern may congratulate themselves at a stroke of fortune which does not come to a company twice in its existence, for they will have a virtual monopoly of the timber trade of the New Province!

INDIAN art is being rapidly demoralised by the use of aniline and other chemical dyes. Cannot something be done to put a stop to a decadence as sad as it is annoying? But there "free trade" in ruin is presumably orthodox, and matters must come all right in the end—but they do not.

I.—MADAME ROLAND.

"Oh, Liberty! How many crimes are committed in thy name!" were the well-known words of Madame Roland as, with a light, springy step, she mounted the scaffold where she was to expiate the crime of having loved her country too well.

Marie-Jeanne, or, as she was familiarly called, Manon, was of seven children the only one who survived her infancy. Her father, Gatiou Philipon, a chaser and worker in enamel, is described as good-looking, fond of money, unscrupulous in the use of means to obtain it, and "in every way a gay, vain, quick-witted, and pleasure-loving Parisian." Manon's mother, née Bimont, was of a very different character. She is described as "a woman of the highest rectitude, and of an almost saintly purity of life," whose "example exercised a powerful influence on her daughter's character."

This character (as a child) is thus portrayed:—"She was thoughtful, affectionate, lively without being boisterous, and easily amenable to reason; but, however tractable, violence or threats made her proportionately obstinate."

Her insatiable propensity to study, joined to an excellent memory, led to her "assimilating" Plutarch, whose animated, though not always trustworthy, accounts of the exploits of ancient Greek and Roman worthies made her acquisition of the work a landmark in her life, though, at the time, she was "barely nine." Telenachus and Tasso's "Jerusalem Delivered" followed, and so deeply did she enter into their spirit that, we read, "there were certain passages which she felt so acutely that no entreaties would have prevailed on her to utter them aloud." Voltaire and Rousseau it was, perhaps, as well that she did not see till later in life (though they then "made as great an epoch in her life as Plutarch had done at nine"), seeing that, when but little advanced in her teens, she had once, at confession, "accused herself of having had emotions contrary to the chastity of a Christian," a line of thought which indiscreet questions in the confessional might probably enough suggest to the most innocent of children.

Before her eighteenth year Manon, who had been so strict in her introspection that she had, at the age of eleven, felt it her duty to repair to the seclusion of a nunnery in order the better to prepare for her first communion, first began to experience religious doubts, and, by reading, not only the books given her by her confessor (whom she had consulted on the subject), but also the works therein confuted, she, "passing in course of time through many intellectual stages, in which she was in turn Jansenist, Socin, Sceptic, Atheist, and Deist, she finally landed in a frame of mind much resembling that of the Modern Agnostic," and she was profoundly moved when, communicating her intellectual changes to her great friend, Sophie Cannet, she found that the latter had, independently, been passing through a similar crisis.

As Manon "increased in years and beauty" suitors were numerous; and the authoress gives, with all a woman's sympathy, an interesting account of the girl's various love affairs, if, indeed, a transaction so prosaic as the usual French making over a daughter willy-nilly to the first suitable parti can be dignified by such a name.

But Manon had a will of her own as to the matrimonial state, and though, owing to her father's gambling propensities and dishonest waste she was no longer (even on the smallest scale) an heiress, and could get no better consolation from her friend, Sophie, than that "from our birth we are destined to wear the moral liveries of our parents," she rejected more than one offer, and finally married a friend of the Cannets, Roland de la Platière, a man of moderate means, on the terms rather of mutual esteem than of mutual love.

The birth, in 1781, of her only child, a daughter, whom, contrary to the all-but universal practice of French women of the better class, she herself nursed, was, after an interval of a year or two, followed by a visit to England, her remarks on which (p. 79) are well worthy careful attention. Like many other enlightened French people, she had read that excellent and once well-known, but now all but obsolete work, "De Lolme on the British Constitution," and seems to have profited by its perusal.

The authoress depicts with much one-sided enthusiasm the Revolution (the well-known night of the 4th August is a "sacred" night, the fall of the Bastille—and, presumably, the massacre of the governor—was effected "in a sublime rage" of the people, &c.), prefacing her narrative with a very good account of the state of France at a time when the clergy had more than half the revenues of the kingdom, and when transit and customs' dues prevailed to such an extent "that a measure of wine which in the Orleanais was worth one halfpenny, by the time it arrived in Normandy cost one shilling."

It is this last part of Madame Roland's life which best exhibits her force of character and her remarkable political foresight. As early in the Revolution as the summer of 1789 she writes (p. 111):—"I believe that the honest Englishman is in the right, and that we must have a small touch of civil war before we are good for anything." Again (p. 115):—"If the National Assembly do not bring two illustrious heads to a formal trial, or if some generous Decrees do not strike them off, you will all go to the Devil together."

That Roland joined the Gironde party, that he became Minister of the Interior, resigning that post the day after the execution of Louis XVI., that Madame Roland literally sacrificed herself to save him, that she was arrested, set free just long enough to enable her to reach her home, and rearrested at the door ere she could once more clasp in her arms her only child, her mock trial, and her execution, all these are matters of history. What the reader will seek, and will not seek in vain, in this work, is a delineation of the inner workings of this wonderful woman's mind, and instances of the beneficial influence which she influenced over a husband who, but for her, would never have been heard of.

The very emotional and interjectional style which Madame Roland has adopted not only betrays violent political bias, but seems to us more appropriate to the life of, say, Rachel, than to that of a self-contained heroine like Madame Roland. For the work itself we have nothing but praise. The authoress has collected, and has carefully collated, an unusual number of authorities, and has produced an eminently readable book.

II.—ELIZABETH FRY (1780-1845).

Elizabeth Fry, though the least self-asserting of beings, deservedly obtained so large a share of public attention that she is peculiarly fitted to occupy a niche in the temple assigned to eminent women. Her life has never, so far as our knowledge extends, been written in a popular, or, indeed, in any but a most unpopular form, in a book that is, bristling with phrases culled from the terminology of a narrow religious sect, and calculated to repel, rather than to allure, the general reader.

Born in 1780, Elizabeth Gurney's son "found her path clear" to become a member of the Quaker sect, in which, indeed, she had been brought up, though, as we shall hereafter see, her children, when married, deserted it for the more genial, and, to them, more congenial, form of worship of the Anglican Church. At an early age she had (p. 6) "searchings of heart," and was more severe in introspection than is usual in girls of seventeen.

In former days the merchant's house contained, as is known to all well-informed readers, not only his residence, but his place of business, usually located on what we should call the rez-de-chaussée—and, when Elizabeth Gurney became Mrs. Fry, she found herself the mistress of a house in St. Mildred's Court, one among the many of the quaint old city courts which have been sadly transmogrified by the advancing march of what we are pleased to call civilization. The death of her father-in-law caused a migration to Plashet, a country seat in Essex, a change which she regarded as beneficial alike to herself, and to her rapidly increasing family. It was her father's death which first "prompted her to serve God in a certain way. This specific way was the way of preaching in meeting, or 'bearing testimony,' as she phrased it, 'at the prompting of the Holy Spirit.'" Having been "acknowledged" (p. 25) as a "minister," that is, one authorised to speak at the usual meetings of the Quakers, she felt herself able to take a more prominent part in religious matters, and began by school-teaching near Plashet. Here her coadjutors were many and various, and no better evidence of her powers of conciliation, which, later on, stood her in such good stead, could well be adduced, than that, in the laudable work of Bible circulation, she had such helpers as the Bishop of Norwich, and many clergymen, not to mention Dr. Steinkopf, the deservedly respected minister of the German Lutheran Church in London. "She worked," we read (p. 28), "harmoniously with all, (Roman) Catholic and Protestant, Churchman, and Dissenter."

The transition from teaching the children of the poor to an inquiry into the condition of their parents is not a great one; and, though it would seem that Elizabeth Gurney had, as a child, expressed a desire to see a prison, it was not till 1813, in the thirty-fourth year of her age, that she first witnessed the hideous sights which Newgate then presented. Her description of these (chap. 5) is really painful reading. How the sexes were huddled together, how decency was utterly disregarded, how crime was, by the indiscriminate herding together of the innocent and the guilty, made to beget crime, is so plainly laid bare as to make one blush that in the present century such enormities could have been perpetrated.

Nothing is more remarkable about Mrs. Fry's career than the influence which she exercised over the members of the lower classes with whom she came into contact. She held firmly to the system of marks (p. 61), advocated by Captain Maconochie, which, in other words, meant that a certain course of continuous good conduct should be exacted before the convict could obtain the tale of marks representing the number of years for which he had been sentenced. "For," as she rightly observes, "let our prison discipline be severe in proportion to the enormity of the crimes of those on whom it is exercised, and let its strictness be such as to deter others from a similar course of iniquity; but let us ever aim at the diminution of crime through the just and happy medium of the reformation of criminals."

Though Mrs. Fry's exertions were, in the first place, devoted to the female prisoners of her own country, she displayed in the highest degree that catholic charity, that universal sympathy, given to so few to feel and to fewer still to exhibit, which sees in the need of others a sufficient claim on one's own exertions. Whether procuring books for the coastguard at home—in a short time she collected 26,000 volumes—whether visiting Copenhagen, Berlin, St. Petersburg, to ameliorate the treatment of female convicts; whether receiving, at home, Royal visitors, whom the fame of her work had attracted, Elizabeth Fry always remained the same earnest, single-minded worker—may we not say apostle?—which she had been, when she first commenced her self-imposed task.

Far from desiring to be—if we may use Macaulay's phrase—"Foundress and first Superior of the order of Sisters of the jails," Mrs. Fry was in the last degree unobtrusive, and the universal recognition which, in such circumstances, her work received, is the highest tribute to its worth and its enduring value.

No notice of this great woman's biography would be complete which did not refer to her private life, her relations in which were much tinged by the peculiarities of the Quaker society to which she belonged. Though taking it much to heart that some of her family had formed matrimonial alliances outside the somewhat narrow pale of the "Friends," she shows herself in every letter the thoughtful, sympathetic parent, feeling for, as well as with, her children. Not exempt from severe trials, she bore them all with a composure and equanimity rarely equalled, and her thoughts were less concerned with herself than with her work. She had, before quitting this life, the "intense satisfaction" of learning "that the London prisons, were all in more or less excellent order, and regularly visited by the ladies who had been her coadjutors, and were to be her successors."

In October, 1845, she passed to a better world, and we cannot conclude our notice in language more appropriate than that used by her biographer, "God buries his worker, but carries on His work." The peculiar work which made her name and life so famous, has grown and ripened right up to the present hour. In this, "her name liveth for evermore."

III.—HARRIET MARTINEAU (1802-1876).

Harriet Martineau, one of the many descendants of Huguenot families, driven from France by the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, who have made for themselves a distinguished name in this country, was the sixth child of a manufacturer of stuffs at Newcastle. This man must have been able to impress his daughter with feelings of sincere affection, of which it is a pleasant proof that, late in life, she so warmly resented Lord Brougham's erroneous assertion that he had failed in business. Her mother's behaviour towards her seems to have been harsh to the verge of brutality, and one cannot sufficiently reprobate the conduct of a mother who could prevent a girl visiting, on his deathbed, her accepted lover, and who could arbitrarily require her, when on the point of achieving literary success in London, to return home and to devote herself to needlework. It reminds one of Charles Dickens's mother, who, with the same contemptible inability to appreciate her child's talents, wished him—so says Forster—to pass the rest of his life in washing out bottles. If, however, brings out into clearer relief the goodness of heart of Harriet Martineau, who could, as a matter of filial duty, allow herself to be thus disposed of by an individual in every way inferior to her, and of whom, notwithstanding our authoress's remarks (p. 11), one involuntarily thinks with very scant respect.

But, though Harriet Martineau throughout behaved as a dutiful and affectionate daughter, it is clear that she keenly felt and resented the treatment to which she was subjected. And here we come across another parallel with Dickens. Just as the great humourist gibbeted—we can use no other word—his father as the ever sanguine, ever helpless, Micawber, so did Harriet Martineau place her mother before the world, in the "Crofton Boys," as the stern, unbending Mrs. Procter, in whose eyes cheerfulness was an offence, and laughter all but a positive crime.

The lives of eminent people, of whichever sex, are, perhaps, best judged by their childhood and early youth. We have never been able to see our way to agree with a very profound thinker, the late Dr. Neil Arnott, that a child's mind is a sheet of blank paper, on which you can write anything. On the contrary, it seems to us that it is precisely from such mistaken ideas that so many faults in education arise. It was by neglecting the strong individuality which characterised Charles Dickens and Harriet Martineau that their parents never "had touch" of them; and what was true as regards them is true of hundreds of other children. For, as Goethe said long since:—"We cannot form children's characters just as we wish; we must take them as God sends them."

"Denn wir können die Kinder nach unserem Sinne nicht formen, Wie sie Gott uns gab, so muss man sie haben und lieben, Sie erziehen auf's Beste, und Jeglichen lassen gewähren."

Harriet's life, as she pathetically says (p. 4), had "had no spring."

"Her deafness, which was the most commonly known of her deficiencies of sensation, was not her earliest deprivation of a sense. She could not remember ever having been able to smell; and, as smell and taste are intimately joined together, and a large part of what we believe to be flavour is really odour, it naturally followed that she was also nearly destitute of the sense of taste. Thus two of the avenues by which the mind receives impressions from the outer world were closed to her all her life, and a third was also stopped before she reached womanhood. The senses are the gates by which pleasure as well as pain enter into the citadel where consciousness resides. Of all the senses, those which most frequently give entrance to pleasure, and most rarely to pain, were those which she lost. 'When three senses out of five are deficient,' as she said, 'the difficulty of cheerful living is great, and the terms of life are truly hard.'"

Her early religious belief seems to have been what we should call pure Theism. There was a Deity, "an Eternal Presence, an ever-living Supreme," whom it was good to worship; but there was no Atonement, no personal evil one, no hell, no verbally-inspired revelation. Yet, possessing these views, she was able, at twenty-one years old, to write a book called "Devotional Exercises, by a Lady." This was the first occasion on which she had ventured to put on a title-page a confession of her sex, her previous efforts having been confined to smaller productions usually signed with a masculine nom de plume.

Her father's death, soon followed by that of her lover, Mr. Worthington, tended further to embitter her life, and having first commenced a literary career at her lover's recommendation, she devoted to him the Essay, entitled "In a Death Chamber," a touching extract from which is given at p. 55 of the volume before us. A correspondence with the editor (Mr. W. J. Fox, Unitarian preacher at South-place, Finsbury, subsequently M.P. for Oldham) of the "Repository," in which this and other Essays appeared, led in the end to a visit to London, where she got an offer from a friend to "do proof correcting and other drudgery," but with the consolatory information, "£100 or £150 a year is as much as our most successful writers usually make." Nothing daunted, she was willing to remain in London, when she was peremptorily ordered to return home forthwith. Few young persons of twenty-seven, on the eve of gaining an independence by their pen, would (as did Harriet) have obeyed. She showed, in these depressing circumstances, her wonderful versatility, by gaining the prize for each of three Essays, tending to convert Roman Catholics, Jews, and Mahomedans, to Unitarian tenets.

The time was, however, at hand when she was to receive, and from one of her own sex, the revelation in which direction her powers could best be exercised. Mrs. Marcet's Conversations on Political Economy was the work which showed her the path on which she henceforth was, in great part, to travel; and, after careful study, she resolved to illustrate the whole subject in a series of stories. The terms which she was compelled to accept from the publisher Fox (a brother of the preacher) were onerous to a degree; but the success of the very first tale was so complete and decisive that Lord Brougham expressed his disgust that his pet "Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge" on these very topics, "seemed not to have a man in it with as much sense of what was wanted as this little deaf girl at Norwich."

Settling in London with her mother, of whom henceforth we hear but little, she found herself an object of universal attention. The list of distinguished philanthropists and others (p. 83) who sought her acquaintance or co-operation is, however, less interesting than the description (pp. 79, &c.) of her manner of working; one the more complete and satisfactory because it was so methodical. Four or five years of something more than active work brought about their inevitable consequence on a delicate and highly wrought nature, in the shape of a long illness, which wholly baffled the doctors. From this she was relieved by mesmerism, and of her sensations while under it she has left (p. 128, &c.) some interesting details.

Henceforth she recommenced her labours with renewed vigour of mind and body, being much influenced in their pursuit by her newly-acquired friend, Mr. H. G. Atkinson, whose attachment to her was wholly platonic, hers to him (as would seem from p. 157) scarcely altogether so.

Her settlement in the Lake District led her, until her final illness of a long twenty years' duration, to devote herself to the welfare of her poorer neighbours. Example is better than precept; and she herself superintended the housework (sometimes even cleaning her own windows), and the cultivation of her little "farm of two acres." But precept was not lacking, for she published the results of her self-imposed experiences, besides giving lectures to the villagers on every appropriate subject. To our mind the pages (chapter 8) devoted to Harriet Martineau's home life constitute, with the exception of those relating to her childhood and gradual mental development, the most interesting, because the most individually characteristic parts of this biography. Mrs. Fenwick Miller, has, perhaps, unduly accentuated her own sympathy with the peculiar religious opinions entertained by Harriet Martineau. But this may well be excused where a book is so evidently a labour of love as is clearly the case in the present instance. The volume is thoughtfully and most readably written, and cannot fail to command general attention.

THE PARLIAMENTARY GENERALS OF THE GREAT CIVIL WAR.*

The earlier chapters of this work, with copious and excellent engravings, have already appeared in the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.) and will, as far at least as the decisive battle of Naseby, so fatal to all the hopes of Charles I., be familiar to many of our readers. The book is necessarily a record of the Great Civil War, and, as such, follows with accuracy the various phases of a conflict of which, considering that one combatant did, and the other did not, hold the pursuings, the ultimate result was, after the first year or two, never in any way doubtful. But it does a great deal more than this. It is, so far as we remember, the first attempt to put into anything like a readable form the narrative of one of the most important periods of our history as seen from the soldier's point of view.

Into the military details, which will more especially attract the professional man, space forbids our entering. But many points of the utmost interest, as regards the conditions under which wars, in the times of the Parliamentary Generals, were carried on, are referred to in the Introduction; which, for accuracy of statement, and for clearness, we regard as one of the most valuable portions of the book. The formation, both of cavalry and of infantry, which was then usually adopted, is well set forth, as is the nature of the arms borne by the soldiery (among which it is curious to observe (p. 5) bows and arrows, as being thought peculiarly adapted to the use of pioneers.

The strategy seems, during the first years of the war, to have been of the worst, though some of the leaders on each side had enjoyed the advantage of Continental experience in the military art. Major Walford says, not less truly than severely, that "the few lessons which may be drawn from the history of these campaigns teach us for the most part only what to avoid in war." Again:—

"Throughout the whole of this war, until the stars of Fairfax and Cromwell rise, we shall find the same inability on each side to grasp the situation, and to judge of the decisive point on which the blow should be delivered. As a rule, the armies wandered about blindly, until they came in contact; upon their meeting followed a battle, which was entirely destitute of any tactical plan, and was remarkable only for hard hitting."

Our author accounts for this partly by the badness of the roads, which rendered elaborate combinations impossible:—

"In the seventeenth century," he tells us (p. 91), "when communications were execrable, and when the power of moving troops was in its infancy, we cannot expect to find any very skilful strategy, and accordingly in this campaign each force came to the rendezvous on the day which best suited its own convenience, while no effort was made to prepare the way for their joint action until the junction had actually taken place."

It must have escaped Major Walford that almost all of the victories of Marlborough and Eugene were won, only three quarters of a century later, simply by strategic combinations on a large scale, carried out in a country where the communications were, and in some parts still are, of the rudest character.

Discipline seems to have been, especially in the first two campaigns, of the laxest, notably on the Royalist side. Nothing can be more instructive than the comparison, between the opposing forces, drawn at p. 77, and again, as to the use of cavalry as éclaireurs, at p. 128. The ardent, impetuous, if somewhat rollicking, cavalier, well typified by Rupert, stands out, throughout the book, in almost dramatic contrast with the dour Puritan. Compare Ireton's "praying regiment" with a scene like this:—

"The officers, who, when Cromwell's cavalry burst into the town (of Bovey Tracey), were playing cards, on finding that the house in which they were had been beset by the Roundheads, flung the stakes out of the window among the men, and, taking advantage of the delay which was caused by the scramble for the money, escaped through a back door, and so across the river."

It is impossible to narrate the history of the Great Civil War without at least some reference to the religious peculiarities of the contending parties, and this is doubtless the reason why no one, not even Hallam, has been thoroughly impartial in dealing with it. Major Walford has, commendably enough, passed over all religious matters as dryfooted as he could; yet scarcely dryshod enough.

For instance, we are "surprised to hear" from our author (p. 125) the theology of the Independents was "broad and liberal." Whatever may have been the merits of Sergeant "Hew-Agag-in-pieces before the Lord," or of Captain "Bind their Kings in chains, and their princes with fetters of iron," tolerance was assuredly not one of them. Excellent as soldiers, "driving before them," as Macaulay says, "in headlong rout the finest infantry of Spain, and storming a breach which had just been pronounced impregnable by the ablest Marshal of France," they reflected the best phase of that best of all military characters, the English. But, once off the battlefield, they too often verified the immortal description given in Hudibras by Butler, who, writing not so long after the times—

And men fell out, they knew not why,
When pulpit, drum ecclesiastick,
Was beat with fists instead of a stick," depicted them as being—

"A sect whose chief devotion lies
In odd perverse antipathies,
In finding fault with that and this,
And finding something yet amiss
As though religion were intended
For nothing else but to be mended,
As querulous and splenetic
As dog distraught, or monkey sick,
Still as perverse and opposite
As if they worshipped God for spite," &c.

We should not be doing justice to this really valuable book did we not give a word of commendation to the maps which place before the reader the various battlefields. That showing the site of the two conflicts at Newbury (p. 63), and that (p. 130) illustrating the position of the two armies at Naseby, strike us as being especially clear.

We must conclude with a grumble that the book contains no index, an omission which will doubtless be remedied in future editions, but which is the more annoying as the headings of the chapters only run "The First Civil War, 1642," and so on. It is not given to every one to be Macaulay's schoolboy, and to remember, for instance, the exact year in which Edgehill was fought. A very few pages of Index, or a fuller Table of Contents, would supply this deficiency.

BURMA AND CHINA.

FOR the first time in our history we have a land frontier continuous with that of the provinces of the Chinese Empire, properly so termed. We say advisedly, for the first time, because the somewhat shadowy influence exercised by the Celestial Empire over Nipal and Bhotan is of the most undefined character. That China has a good deal to say in the internal affairs of Tibet we have ourselves readily acknowledged, by sending Mr. Colman Macaulay to Peking in order to obtain formal permission to open up commercial intercourse between our own possessions and that country. But our recent conquest of Upper Burma has brought us into direct—or all but direct—contact with the Chinese Province of Yunnan. And the Chinese have lost no time in reminding us that “property has its duties as well as its rights.” The Chinese Emperor claims to be Suzerain of Upper Burma; and, now that Upper Burma is an integral portion of the British Empire, demands a portion of this Province. The requirement that the doubtful allegiance—if, indeed, it were allegiance at all—of the whole Burmese Kingdom should be recognised by the cession in fee-simple, so to say, of a part of it, seems at first sight startling enough. That it has been seriously urged there cannot be a doubt. Indeed, it is an open secret that this, as much as anything else, caused our late Government to hesitate before finally announcing the incorporation of Thebaw's territory in the Queen's dominions, that the negotiations on the subject were in progress when that Government fell, and that the spirit in which our new neighbours have carried them on has by no means improved since the accession to power of a Government of which Mr. Gladstone is the head. It may not, therefore, be out of place briefly to consider on what (if on any) grounds, the Chinese claims, considered as claims, rest. How far it might be advisable to make a reasonable concession to China is a wholly different matter, and one which must be considered on wholly different grounds. It is one, too, concerning which we have expressed an opinion which no subsequent events have led us to modify.

An interesting account of past relations between Burma and China was given by Professor Douglas in the January (the first) number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review. It is clear that the Chinese desired from the first to carry things with a very high hand, speaking of the Burmese presents as “tribute,” and, in all their records, ignoring the fact that the decennial presentations of gifts between the two Governments were reciprocal, that the Burmese were more than once deluded into the belief that the messengers bringing these presents came from Peking instead of being—as was the fact—despatched by a Provincial Governor, and that, on one occasion at least, the Chinese Emperor designated the Burmese King as his “younger brother,” a distinct mark, according to Chinese notions, of superiority on the part of the former.

On the other hand, it seems open to but little doubt that the Chinese Emperor, K'ien-lung, did, in 1795, when announcing his own abdication, recommend his son and successor to the favourable notice of the King of Burma, requesting the latter “to consider Shi-wu-ye” (the future Emperor) “as [your] own younger brother and as [your] own son, and assist and look [after him].” Terms which, if not implying any inferiority on the part of the Ruler of the Celestials, are far enough removed from any assumption of superiority.

Indeed, we think it clearly proved that “the relation between the two countries is based solely and entirely on the principle of mutual advantage, and that the complimentary letters and presents exchanged between the two sovereigns are but the garnishing of the dishes of solid nourishment and support which the merchants on both sides of the frontier secure by the exchange of their commodities.” The security of the trade routes is, therefore, a matter of the first moment to them; and the travesty of a Government which prevailed under the drunken and reckless Thebaw was far too impotent to ensure this. Blackmailers abounded, and seized Bhamo. This was too much for even Thebaw to tolerate. The marauders were expelled, and such tranquillity as could be expected under a Burmese governor restored to the headquarters of the trans-frontier trade. Professor Douglas justly says:—

It may be imagined with what impatience the Chinese, who are essentially a nation of shopkeepers, have regarded the interference with their trade with Burma begotten by these circumstances, more especially when they found that the drunken despot, whose shameful misgovernment had brought about this disorder, was coquetting with the French, whose presence in Tong-king already constitutes so serious a danger to the peace of the empire. The establishment of a strong power in Upper Burma is recognised by Chinese statesmen as the most effectual remedy against the existing evil and the still more serious complications which would arise from French intrigues. Of us they have no fear. They would be perfectly willing to see our frontier made coterminous with their own, as the benevolent offices which they volunteered during the late campaign sufficiently indicate. Fortune comes to us, therefore, with both hands full. Thus “everything lies level to our wish;” but it must be borne in mind that it is only with the full concurrence of the Chinese that we can make the best use of our position. In conjunction with them the pacification of the border tribes and the consequent security of the trade routes can be easily effected, but without their co-operation the task would be one of continual anxiety and of uncertain results. Any legitimate concessions, therefore, which would tend to secure a future cordial alliance with China should unquestionably be made, and we have no hesitation in saying that a compact so concluded would exercise a peaceful and beneficent influence over the whole of south-eastern Asia.

With these sentiments we entirely agree. It will, however, be necessary to make it clearly understood that in making whatever concessions we may think advisable, we are recognising no rights on the part of the Chinese over our new Province. Whatever may have been Thebaw's status relatively to China—and what it really was we have endeavoured to describe—we cannot forget that, by right of conquest, our own position is one in all respects different.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, MARCH 11.

LORD KIMBERLEY [moved for a Select Committee to join with a Committee of the House of Commons to inquire into the operation of various Acts of Parliament relating to India. In moving, he stated that for thirty-four years there had not been an inquiry into the machinery of government in that Empire. He believed that both in this country and India itself the administration of our East Indian possessions had been highly successful; but as very great changes had occurred in India since 1858, when the government had been transferred from the East India Company to the Crown, he thought it very desirable that the Act of 1858 and the five subsequent statutes which dwelt with the machinery of administration in India should be inquired into by Committees representing the two Houses of the Imperial Parliament.

LORD CRANBROOK observed that as the intention of the late Government to institute such an inquiry had been announced in the Speech from the Throne at the commencement of the present session, the Secretary for India would perceive that there would be no objection on the part of the Opposition to the motion now before the House. He thought such an inquiry as that proposed was desirable, and that it would result in showing that the natives of British India had no cause to complain of the manner in which they were governed.

A similar motion was made and agreed to in the Commons.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed all their sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by day-light, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 23, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 5th March; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 3rd March.

THE Times correspondent, telegraphing from Mandalay on the 13th, reports Mr. Bernard's arrival and assumption of the Government. The country is being gradually pacified. There is news from Bhamo that the town is in a quiet and satisfactory state. Trade by the Irrawaddy steamers is brisk all along the river, and the trade between Mandalay and Bhamo is largely increasing.

THERE is some grumbling at Mandalay about the absence of any adequate provision for the disposal of Civil suits." The Deputy Commissioner cannot always be at headquarters—inter arma silent leges—and meanwhile all Court business is suspended. This state of things seriously checks the revival of trade. The creating of some tribunal to deal with Civil cases is a matter of urgency.

It is well to remember, in reading the above and the subjoined quotation, that the Correspondent is looking at the whole matter through legal spectacles. We should like to have heard the reply of such a man as Elphinstone to the query "what laws are in force?" in a conquered country! Summum jus, summa injuria in this as in other cases.

It is also essential that some proclamation should be issued, or notification made, declaring what laws are in force in Upper Burma. It has been decided that the Indian codes, the only system of laws with which the officers administering the country are acquainted, are not in force. At present it is at the discretion of every civil officer to decide what law is applicable to any case coming before him, however junior or untrained the officer may be; and, however serious the question, or the amount involved, there is no appeal from his decision.

LORD KIMBERLEY announced last night, in the House of Lords, the receipt of the following message from the Viceroy:—

Prendergast telegraphs that he has dispersed the large body of insurgents collected at Yemethen, and that the neighbouring Woons are in friendly communication with him.

THE Calcutta Correspondent of the same paper repeats that after the promulgation—probably to-morrow—of the Budget, the Government will make the best of their way to Simla. The accounts in the Budget are to be recast, so as to show the loss by exchange. The crop reports are encouraging. Opium, railways, and rice are expected to show favourable results. The revenue, in other words, is very satisfactory. The two causes of anxiety are the great strain put on the revenue for Military and Public Works, and silver.

THE report of Mr. Justice Prinsep, who was deputed last year to make a tour of inspection of the subordinate Civil Courts in the Provinces, is satisfactory as to the quantity and quality of the work performed, but much less so as to the want of establishments and of proper Courts.

WE deeply regret to read in the same telegram that the "Hindoo Lady" who has so well pleaded the cause of her oppressed sex, and on whose letters we have more than once commented, is in really great danger of being handed over to the tender mercies of an ignorant husband, who has scarcely ever seen her since she was a child. The Times has printed summaries of two striking letters on infant marriage and enforced widowhood, published under the nom de plume of "A Hindoo Lady" in the Times of India. The writer of those letters has again come prominently before the public, as herself affording an example of her own pathetic description of the unhappy lot of her sex in India. Rukmibai—for that is her name—when only eleven years old was given in marriage to a lad of nineteen. She remained in her father's house, was well educated, and is now described as a young lady of high intelligence and refined instincts. Her husband, on the other hand, is said to be little better than a coolie, ignorant, uncultivated, and unable to earn more than ten rupees a month. The idea of going to live with such a man was utterly repulsive to her. She accordingly refused to do so. Her husband thereupon brought a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights in the Bombay High Court. Mr. Justice Pinhey, who first heard the case, dismissed it without calling on the defendant. An appeal was lodged. It was argued last week before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Bayley, who have taken time to consider their judgment. It was evident that the sympathies of the Court were entirely with the lady; but the question they had to try was one of law, not sentiment. Should they hold—as is not unlikely—that the Hindoo law affords no relief to the wife in such a case, then it may at least be hoped that Rukmibai's sad fate will have more effect than her letters have had in inducing Native reformers to direct their energies less to vague political aspirations and more to the pressing evils of their social system.

FROM Maruchak we learn, under date March 12th, that Sir W. Ridgway and many of his colleagues had arrived there, and that the weather was perfect. The demarcation was to proceed as soon as the Russian party could move; and, if no unnecessary delay occur, should be finished by the end of April. Should be—yes; but with a Gladstone Government in power, will not the Divine Figure from the North cause some very "unnecessary delay" to occur?

LATER intelligence says that the erection of demarcation pillars had recommenced, and that maps are complete up to the Oxus, whither the Commissioners will soon begin their march. The Times Correspondent significantly adds:—

Some difficulties await them, owing to the vague knowledge of the country possessed by the officers on both sides. When the agreement was arrived at in 1873 between the Governments as to the general frontier definition, it was intended to secure the territory then in the actual possession of Afghanistan.

All are well. Letters should come by way of India.

MORE straws to see how the wind blows. A report ("which needs confirmation") is "that an arrangement has been made between the Governments of Russia and China to connect Peking and Kiachta by telegraph."

A LETTER in the Times, dated Rangoon, February 5th, reports the discovery at Mandalay of a letter from "a firm dating from one of the principal thoroughfares in London, and who describe themselves as 'Government contractors,'" offering surreptitiously to supply Thebaw with a complete Whitworth battery. The letter is dated September 30th, at a time, that is, when war was known to be impending. The Times might surely have given the names of these would-be traitors to their country, if only pour encourager les autres. We hope that some one in the House will gibbet them by having the letter printed as a Return.

It would be amusing, were it not lamentable as reflecting on the character of the "high contracting parties" concerned, to read, as we do in the Birmingham Daily Gazette of the 16th, that the bayonets which, but for the exposures in the Press, and but for the publication of such books as "Suakin in 1885," would still have been issued (as under the late Gladstone "contracting" Government they had been issued) to our troops, are being sold, in the Brummagem of which they are the fitting representatives, at a penny each, approximately their real value. The evidence in the case of a man who had attacked—of course, without being able to hurt him—a constable with one of these precious "weapons" is suggestive enough:—

Superintendent Stevenson said that bayonets were being sold at a place in Digbeth at one penny each and a large number of boys had purchased them. The bayonet which had been taken from the prisoner was handed to the Bench by Superintendent Stevenson, and Mr. Marris said that the weapons were doubtless waste stock. One person who sold them said they were purchased at Woolwich. A great number had been sold.

Is there no member of Parliament who will insist on this matter being probed to the bottom? The warmest apologists of useless swords and worthless bayonets will at least admit that they now see the latter appraised at their real value—one penny! What did the late "liberal"—to contractors—Government pay for them? The turn of the swords has yet to come. We fully expect to hear of their being on sale at the "marine store dealers'" for a few pence.

It will be some time ere the Delhi display ceases to supply amusing anecdotes. Here are two from the Delhi Gazette—

During the Delhi tamasha, Holkar, who at all times is, to say the least, brusque in his manner, asked Lord Dufferin whether he intended to annex Burma; but our clever diplomatist answered gracefully, "All that I wish to annex is your Highness's friendship."

Holkar, unabashed, shortly afterwards observed that Lord Dufferin had not yet sent him the promised photo of the Rawul Pindi Durbar. His Lordship, turning to Mr. MacKenzie Wallace, asked him to make a note of it, upon which Holkar asked, in the calmest way, "Is this gentleman your Excellency's private photographer?" Lord Dufferin said, "No, Lady Dufferin is my private photographer; this gentleman is the keeper of my conscience."

SPEAKING of the proposed addition to the Finance Commission in India of local members to represent local views and interests, the Indo Prakash observes:—

This addition of local members, though it will materially strengthen the Committee in the way we suggested, will not fully satisfy all the requirements of the case. The local members, to be of any real service, ought to be endowed with all the powers of the members of the general Committee. They ought to be able to direct the proceedings from the commencement and to have a voice in the deliberations. One non-official Anglo-Indian like the Hon. Mr. Forbes-Adam, and one non-official Native like the Hon. Mr. Dadabhai Navroji, with the Hon. Mr. Ranade, will make an excellent local committee for Bombay provided each member has full powers of initiation, discussion, and determination of every financial question. Each of the other Provinces must likewise Indian and one Native from each of the Provinces, all having be fully represented. There must be at least one non-official Anglo-equal powers of inquiry, deliberation, and decision. On the personnel of the Committee depends in a great measure the success of the scheme, and we trust Government will not mar their proposal by any untimely narrowness of view.

It is not, on the whole, encouraging to read, as we do in the Army and Navy Gazette, that the foreign officers, on second thoughts apparently, were not so vastly impressed with our Indian Army.

The German officers, Baron Hüne and Colonel von Hagenau, did, indeed, find much to praise. They were not prepared for such splendid matériel, and for such fine materials for fighting—the physique of the Sikhs and the excellence of the best regiments of the Native Cavalry; but they saw and recognised the existence of some things which they by no means admired—amongst them, as we mentioned last week, the paucity of European officers in the Native battalions, the defective transport, and the transparent incapacity of the Generals to handle large bodies of men to the best advantage. Lord Reay's knowledge of German enabled him to get at the penstées intimes—at least, it was thought so—of our critical visitors, and we believe his lordship could open our eyes a little by a revelation of their candid opinions. A German officer is generally a superior person given to the nil admirari, and though we confess that what we know of Hagenau would lead us to attach great importance to his opinion, we think the Frenchman and the Italian might be heard with benefit. As to the Russian, he is said to have stated tout bonnement of what he saw:—"It does not give me the least anxiety! I am not afraid of this Indian army, and I don't care for it either in quality or quantity."

We must hope that it was only a sour-grape feeling which gave rise to this somewhat outspoken opinion.

NEVERTHELESS we have a good deal of lee-way to fetch up. As in the following matter:—

It is a pity (says one of the Correspondents with the Boundary Commission) that our Sowars and Sepoys have not the same advantages as the Cossacks in the way of shooting. The Russian Government allow the latter ammunition for sporting purposes, and in this way not only add to their rations, but also develop their skill in shooting. This plan is one which might with considerable advantage be adopted by us. I fancy the gain would be considerable, and the expense nothing to be alarmed at.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—On Wednesday the India Council offered 50 lacs of drafts on India, and allotted less than 20, the total sales of the day being subsequently raised to Rs.21,90,000. The highest price at which tenders were sent in was 1s. 6d. per rupee for both bills and transfers, and no tender at the price was rejected. The Council either refused to allot below that figure, or the applications were exceedingly small. On Thursday 7 lacs of transfers were sold at the same price. For the last five allotments the minimum price accepted by the Council has been no better than 1s. 6d. per rupee—that is to say, just 1d. below the average price at which Sir Auckland Colvin estimated the drawings would be made this financial year, when making his Budget statement. As we are now within measurable distance of the close of the financial year it is easy to see to what extent the Budget anticipations have been realised. There are two more drawings to be made this year, but only the proceeds of one drawing will be included in this year, as the bills to be allotted on the 31st inst. will be paid for in the next financial year. The following is the position of the India Council, which cannot now be materially altered:—

For the "Financial year 1885-86," the Budget estimate was Rs. 17,39,83,584 Council drafts to yield, at 1s. 7d., £13,773,700.

Amounts sold during	Rupees.	Sterling.	Average rate.
Financial year (1st April to 19th March, 1885-86), 51 weeks ... ..	12,80,32,769	£9,746,906	1s. 6-27d.
Corresponding period of 1884-85 ... ..	16,70,85,119	13,447,562	1s. 7-32d.

This week 50 lacs of Council bills will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to March 15th inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.12,51,42,769, realising £9,530,156. To the corresponding date last year Rs.16,20,41,118, realising £13,049,939, had been disposed of.

Chit Chat.

BRIJ RAJ, the "Jumbo" of Indian Elephants, and a distinguished celebrity in his time, has passed away. This huge elephant was reported, and it is believed with truth, to have been the largest creature of his kind in the country, measuring the well-nigh impossible height of 10 feet 6½ inches; he was, too, as affable as he was large. "A monument," says the Pioneer, "erected by his sorrowing owner, the Raja of Sirmoor, will record his greatness and premature death, for one so large, at the age of fifty." This is, indeed, an era of notabilities!

"In India," says the paper in question, "as elsewhere, the measure of a man's influence is his power to enforce it." Would that this maxim were written up in letters of gold for the perusal of all those who seem to think that mankind can be treated with kindness and pacified with concessions.

To borrow Rs. 5,000 and get Rs. 1,710 is the fate of those who in a certain city in the Bombay Presidency are wont to repair to the usurers of this unfortunate locality. Well may this mode of doing business be termed "pure, unadulterated villainy."

MR. PALMER, a well-known amateur, has presented to the Survey Department the portraits of the two last Surveyors-General; they were accepted with alacrity, and all sorts of pretty things said to the talented artist and beneficent donor. So far good; but when a person hands one down to posterity on canvas, it seems somewhat peculiar to take upon oneself to praise him for "occupying his leisure hours to such advantage." It should be left to others to say what it scarcely becomes the subject of the portrait to utter.

If anything can make the income-tax popular, or even workable in Bombay, it will be the appointment of Mr. Dosabhoj Framji, the well-known Parsi, to superintend the working of the Act imposing the obnoxious impost.

THREE years ago Mr. Thompson, the Assistant-Superintendent of Police at Kurnool, was attacked by a band of villains, who so severely injured him that he was left on the ground for dead. Quite recently the Secretary of State, attracted by the gallantry displayed on this occasion, and moved by compassion at the nature of the wounds the Superintendent had received, was generously pleased to grant the officer a gratuity of six months' pay, and a pension of Rs. 50 a-month. But in the meantime death had intervened, and the poor man had passed beyond the pale of rewards and gratuities. Red tape had secured another victim!

THE jute trade in India bids fair ere long to contribute a large supply of "unemployed workmen." Out of sixteen mills eleven have been worked at a loss for upwards of two years. Two are in liquidation, and no more than three showed a profit. Cotton companies, on the other hand, seem to be in a fairly prosperous condition.

THE Baluchis seem an enterprising race; at any rate, they have solved the problem how to make one's "stars" favourable. "When the star is in the earth" a Baluch may travel in any direction; but in a certain instance the heavenly orb was obdurate. Not to be outwitted in such a humiliating perplexity the ingenious Native "snipped up little pieces of cloth to represent the star, and solemnly buried them." Henceforth "a free and independent" man, he could defy the inauspicious destiny marked out for him on the dial of Fate!

A CERTAIN Native, known to fame as Mehdi Ali, of Hyderabad, has been exhausting the vocabulary of adulation at a banquet given to the Resident, Mr. Cordery. So far well; but the Pioneer is very rude. "Should Mr. Mehdi Ali (so they write) ever think of exchanging his present responsible labours for the more exciting career of a political agitator he should have a bright future before him as an Indian delegate. Such eloquence as his would almost propel even Mr. Digby into the House of Commons, and the Ghases and Chanderkars would all have to take back seats." Poor "Digby, C.I.E.," he has hardly recovered from the castigation he received at the hands of Sir George Birdwood, than, battered and tattered, he is again knocked down by the Pioneer. The fates do, indeed, seem enraged at this hapless C.I.E. He cannot even rejoice that with all his troubles he has secured the one prize which probably induced him to enter the arena of politics—a seat in the House of Commons. Alas! that our national chamber is not destined, at any rate for the present, to witness a passage-of-arms between the pamphleteer and the statesman. Fortune has been kind—very kind—to suffering humanity.

THE Daily Telegraph is "gushing over India, but surely Mr. Edwin Arnold, the editor and also the writer of the articles, ought to know better than to give a sentimental hue to the everyday existence in the land of Sun. It needs no great ability to paint a country in glowing colours, but it does require experience to see through the atmosphere of romance which surrounds "fresh scenes and pastures new," and that experience Mr. Arnold possesses, but perhaps "gush" is profitable.

A MEETING at Agra has framed a resolution urging that "unequal marriages be strictly prohibited." But what is an unequal marriage?

GOOD news for cricketers! A Parsi team are about to visit England—but will they hold their own against the cracks of the "crackest" country in the world as regards bat and ball?

BOMBAY has been in a fever of excitement owing to a yacht match, the finest of its sort which has ever been witnessed in the harbour. So it is, that wherever and whenever an Englishman finds a bit of water there he will be sure to indulge in the national pastime of racing. Assuredly, too, if one is not sea-sick, few pleasures can rival the delights of skimming the ocean at the rate of 14 or 15 knots an hour.

"NEVER hallo till you are out of the wood," so runs the proverb in England, and its truth at Bombay is equally observable. The story is thus told by the Times of India:—"La Mascotte, with her owner, Mr. Gill, and a few guests, among whom was Colonel Burnett, the A.A.G., sailed in at a clipping pace, and passing the May Frere fourth in succession, won on the time allowed her by the Water Queen by ten minutes. Elated with victory, her crew raised a cheer; the boat was turning at the time to go to her moorings. The helmsman, evidently quite as excited as his comrades, forgot to watch the tiller, and coming round sharp the huge lateen sails filled with the stiff nor'-wester that was blowing, careened, and capsized the craft and her burden. Fortunately nobody got entangled among the rigging, and the next the spectators saw of the winners was that they were all crowded on top of the keel. A number of boats and launches set off immediately to the assistance of the shipwrecked mariners, and rescued them from their perilous position."

OUR BURMESE WARS AND RELATIONS WITH BURMA.*

A second edition of this valuable work, which, on account of its historical accuracy, and of its minute topographical descriptions, has been recognised by various Government departments, and by the general public, as an excellent Handbook of recent Burmese History, was much needed, and we are pleased to see it in print. The details of the expeditions of Sir A. Campbell in 1826, when we annexed some, and of General Godwin, in 1852, when we added the remainder, of the Burmese seacoast, however important, excite, perhaps, at the present moment a somewhat languid interest. Public attention has naturally been engrossed by the more recent operations of Sir H. Prendergast, consequent on which the whole of the whilom dominions of the dynasty of Alompra have been incorporated into the British territories. Yet it is not to be forgotten that the second Burmese Expedition was conducted, throughout, in such a manner as to elicit the unqualified admiration of the Iron Duke, the unbeaten vanquisher of Napoleon, a man by no means prone to award undeserved praise. The special value of Colonel Laurie's work just now, is, that, by depicting, from personal knowledge, the state of Burma and of its inhabitants, it enables the reader to form an idea of the steps which have to be taken, and of the difficulties which have to be encountered, in welding the people of Upper and Lower Burma into a homogeneous mass. It has been too much the fashion to speak of the two populations as though they were practically one (thus ignoring the very large admixture of Chinese and Shan blood in the Upper Province). It is, no doubt, true that on both sides of the late frontier (a purely artificial one, by the way), the population was scarcely distinguishable. Yet, when once the boundary line is left behind, the difference becomes visible enough; that, for instance, between the denizens of Rangoon and those of Bhamo would strike the most casual observer.

Colonel Laurie very justly observes, that, "ever since the conquest of Pegu we have virtually had the Burmese Empire at our disposal." Our author, as it is, perhaps, needless to observe, is a warm annexationist; regarding the extension, in an Easterly direction, of the British Empire, with feelings of the most hopeful anticipation; and some remarks (p. 369) on the value of Upper Burma well deserve perusal, notwithstanding the somewhat hyperbolic expressions in which they are couched. Some interesting pages (420, &c.) are devoted to the Looshai's (alias Kookies) and Nagas; and it is amusing to read that, not so many years ago, "a popular writer was asked by a London map-seller whether Looshai was not an island on the coast of China?" But the Shans, wedged in as they are between China proper, and Burma proper, yet occupying large tracts of both, are, from a practical point of view, a far more interesting race than either Nagas or Looshais; and of these some noteworthy particulars are recorded at p. 364.

Political matters inevitably "crop up," and, as regards one point, our author seems to have been misinformed. He tells us (p. 393) that Thebaw was said to have sent a mission to Peking, acknowledging the suzerainty of China, "of which he is a vassal." It has, we think, been distinctly shown that he was nothing of the kind, and that a friendly exchange of presents was the chief feature of the intercourse between Ava and Peking.

It will be seen that Colonel Laurie's book, though in the main, dealing with military operations, contains much miscellaneous and valuable information regarding a country which we may fitly term "Our new Province," and no one desirous of information respecting Burma can fail to be instructed by its perusal.

ZOROASTER.†

In selecting Zoroaster as the central figure of his romance Mr. Crawford set himself no easy task. In the first place, where did Zoroaster live? The question is not altogether easy to answer. In the work before us he is made contemporary with Daniel, who died in the reign of Darius Hyaspes, and the author has conceived the notion of making the Lawgiver of the Parsis a disciple sitting at the feet of, and imbibing inspirations from, the Prophet of the Jews. This may or may not have been the case, and in a work of fiction a certain liberty is of course allowable; but it is open to question whether the religion of the Jews bears sufficient resemblance to the faith of the Iranians to justify the bold assumption as to the origin of the latter. None the less, we congratulate Mr. Crawford on his efforts to clothe the life and doctrines of the Zoroastrians with the robe of fiction, and impart to the subject that interest which such a mode of treatment is calculated to afford. The attempt is a step on the almost unexplored pathway of Oriental fiction, a mine of literary wealth destined in the future, it may be hoped, to play a conspicuous part in the world of letters.

The interest of the tale centres upon the rivalry of two Queens, both of them of faultless beauty and matchless charms. One, Atossa by name, on the destruction of her lord, the self-indulgent Cambyses, gave her hand—it could scarcely be said her heart—to the pretender, Smerdis the Magian, and, when the latter was slain by Darius, the proud widow passed as a spoil of war to the tent of her conqueror, and became the wife of the all-powerful ruler of the Medes and Persians. It has been said that she was beautiful, if, indeed, such a comparatively commonplace term does justice to a matron who is portrayed as one of the most perfect of the daughters of Eve. Above criticism as regards form and shape, the haughty Queen was, in the matter of mind, beneath contempt, as lacking those charms and virtues which lend grace and attraction to the fairer portion of God's creation. Cold, heartless, unmerciful, and indifferent, she would more than once have been gathered to her ancestors had not her magnificent appearance and enticing seductiveness stayed the hand of her royal consort, who could not bring himself to uplift his arm against a being so exquisite; so she lived on plotting, intriguing, and bewitching, the destroying angel of death, rather than a cherub from Heaven.

Quite otherwise was Nehushta, the daughter of Jerusalem. Scarcely, if any, less elegant in body, she possessed the charms of mind which never fail to please alike in the proudest possessor of a palace as in the humblest denizen of a cottage. A Jewess of the Jews, she possessed the haughty spirit which even to this day characterises that extraordinary and remarkable race; her eye flashed with bewitching fascination, her bosom heaved with maddening tremor; while her countenance, dark and swarthy, as became the people from whom she gloried to have descended, betokened a determination and vigour of mind which at times laid low in the dust of humiliation the rival she hated. Thus the two Queens paced the stage of Time; the antipathy between them was bitter, the aversion unquenchable. Nehushta trod a dangerous and precarious path, but Atossa, more fortunate, was safe from the baser machinations with which she, on her part, sought to destroy and remove from her path the one being who shared with her the admiration of the Lord of the Palace of Shurban. What in the end resulted from this war à l'outrance between competitors so plenteously endowed with powers of attraction is the privilege of the reader to discover; nor, we venture to predict, will a perusal of the book belie its author's reputation. The plot, though simple, is attractive, and, when the story is ended, more will have been learned about Zoroaster, alike as a man and as a prophet—the founder of a religion—than would result from many a wearisome hour of toil and labour devoted to antiquarian research and historical inquiry.

BARCHESTER TOWERS, AND THE WARDEN.*

We had occasion a few weeks since to allude in terms of the highest commendation to the shilling edition of Disraeli's novels recently issued by Messrs. Longmans, Green, and Co. To the list are now added two of Anthony Trollope's best known productions, "Barchester Towers," and "The Warden." It is needless to repeat the high encomiums then passed upon the style in which the volumes are presented to the public; we have exhausted our catalogue of praise. It must suffice to say that the two works now published are as faultless in appearance and style as their predecessors, and equally interesting as regards the contents; to say more would be impossible, to say less scarcely justice alike to author or publisher.

THE LITERATURE OF EGYPT AND THE SOUDAN.†

"Egyptian lore in all its branches has always proved to be a magic attraction to the most celebrated authors of every age; and whether there be occasion to consult some occult treatise or the hieroglyphic teachings of the Book of the Dead, or a modern statement of a contemporary question of social economy, some fruitful fount of knowledge is sure to be at hand if the seeker only knows where to find it." To guide such seeker is the aim and object of the work which Ibrahim Hilmy has presented to the public. Himself an exile from the land of his birth, he has turned his leisure hours to good account, for his "catalogue raisonné" of all that has ever been published in regard to the land of Pharaohs is a complete index at the disposal of the student of Egyptian customs, history, or literature. To review such a work is scarcely possible within any reasonable degree of space which is practicable. We must content ourselves with saying that we have tested the book in every conceivable direction, alike classical and commonplace, and we have never failed to find information on any particular subject, or, at any rate, to trace a reference to some work where it could be easily and surely obtained. Ibrahim Hilmy's compilation is a monument to his assiduity, and he richly deserves the meed of praise and public approbation which it may be predicted he is sure to attain.

It may be added that the way the volume is presented to the public leaves nothing to be desired or improved.

VERSES—TRANSLATED AND ORIGINAL*

Of this little production we may at once say that we consider it worthy of "The Laureate of the North-West Provinces," and that we have read it with great pleasure. Coleridge long ago said that prose meant "words in the best order," while poetry exacted "the best words in the best order." To select these "best words" when an accurate rendering of other folks' ideas is, as in translation, requisite, is no easy task: and Mr. Keene appears to us to have acquitted himself of it with great felicity; retaining (so far as we know them) the spirit of the originals, while putting this spirit into nervous and idiomatic English. His renderings of poems by Heine and Béranger—both difficult, the former all but impossible, to reproduce in a foreign tongue—strike us as especially happy.

An intermediate position between the translations and the original pieces is occupied by "Love dreams," a free adaptation of the Song of Solomon, regarded "as a poem of pastoral life in Palestine." Mr. Keene has shown both skill and judgment in the manner in which he has dealt with a task, the accomplishment of which is the more difficult because it involves a somewhat free use of one of the canonical books of Scripture.

Coming to the verses in which the genius of the writer shows itself unfettered, those classed as "Original," it is impossible to avoid being struck, not only with their beauty and tenderness, but with the fact that they are almost throughout in a minor key. Even in "Carpe Diem" (where we might expect a "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die"—"quam minimum credula postero"—tone) our poet, after depicting various worldly pleasures, winds up thus:—

"But sweeter far the home at eve,
The modest glass, the sea-coal fire,
With hearts that never learned to grieve
For one inordinate desire;
Then the good night of 'Earth to Earth,'
That consecrates and seals the past,
When, after days of decent mirth,
Unfeared, unhastened, comes the last."

Very sweet, very beautiful, but very sad. However, the entertainment offered in this little work is so good, that we shall not quarrel with the ménue. Mr. Keene has approved himself, not for the first time, as one possessed, in no common degree, of poetical feeling, and as a master of the art of expressing it. We cordially recommend his little volume.

DEBRETT'S HOUSE OF COMMONS AND THE JUDICIAL BENCH.†

"Debrett's House of Commons and the Judicial Bench" has just been issued for the current year. Accurate, complete, and authentic, it is a safe guide in all matters to which it relates; perhaps, however, the highest praise which could be given is to assert that in all respects it is worthy of the high position which it has now for many years attained.

NATIONAL INDIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of this excellent Association was held on the 15th inst. at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of the Duke of Connaught, who was supported by the Earl of Iddesleigh, Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Mark Kerr, Sir P. Lumsden, and many other well-known noblemen and gentlemen. Resolutions having been passed, approving the objects aimed at by the Association, the Duke of Connaught, in answer to a vote of thanks for presiding, delivered an address, which was warmly, and deservedly, applauded throughout, and a summary of which we subjoin:—

The Duke of Connaught said it was with great satisfaction they had heard the testimony that had been given to the work of the Association by the two Native gentlemen who had addressed them, and he would specially compliment Mr. Bishau Narayan Dar upon his excellent and patriotic speech. His (the Duke of Connaught's) experience in India went to show that education had made less progress in the North-West than in Bombay and Madras. In these Provinces, however, a younger generation was growing up, imbued with broader and higher ideas. It was not properly understood in England, how many difficulties the authorities in India had to contend with in combating the prejudice and ignorance of the people. They had to deal with different races, different religions, and different stages of civilization, and there was sometimes manifested a feeling of despondency or a tendency to ignore the feelings that were deeply implanted in the Native races. They could only accomplish good results by careful, honest, and thorough work, and by encouraging among Indians themselves a desire for a higher education rather than by forcing it upon them under Government pressure. With regard to the education of Indian women, of which they had heard much, he had very strong feelings. When he was in India the Duchess of Connaught went about a great deal among the schools and zenanas, and made the acquaintance of the Indian ladies whenever she had opportunity. Over and over again she had told him of the terrible ignorance that prevailed among them. They were charming in appearance and in manners, but the ignorance they displayed distressed the Duchess beyond measure. He hoped the fund that had been started by Lady Dufferin would do a vast amount of good in remedying this. As they knew, the mortality among Indian women was very great, and he hoped it might in some degree be checked by instructing some of them in the rudiments of medical science, so far as to be able to treat the cases that were of frequent occurrence in the zenanas. With instruction in medicine, combined with general education, they might then look forward to a happy future for the women of India. There could be but one wish among Englishmen, to enable the people of India to acquire a higher state of civilization more in harmony with Western ideas. As to promoting social intercourse between the two nations, that was much easier to talk and write about than to carry out practically. The prejudices of caste were so strong as to prevent Indian gentlemen from cultivating that personal intercourse with Englishmen we should desire. Perhaps these prejudices might be somewhat over-rated, and might often be overcome. He had met very many Native gentlemen in India, and had enjoyed social intercourse with them, and he had returned to this country deeply impressed with their good feeling and generous kindness. They were also distinguished by their hospitality and charity; there were no paupers in India, the senior member of the family being bound in honour to support those who were dependent upon him. The younger members looked up to the head of the house, and felt a pride in the traditions of their family that prevented them from stooping to any dishonourable action. The Association which had called them together on this occasion was still in its infancy, but he had no doubt that if properly supported it would effect good work. In the North-West and the Punjab it would find a promising field of work, and the warm-hearted Natives of that region would give it a hearty welcome. It gave him especial pleasure to support the Association, of which the Princess of Wales was the present patroness, and he could not forget that his dear sister, the Princess Alice, who was its first patroness, took the deepest interest in its work. He was glad to embrace the first opportunity he had had since his return from India to identify himself with the noble objects and aims which the Association had in view. He hoped that one result of the meeting would be to increase the funds of the Association, which was doing a great deal to promote the happiness of our fellow-subjects in India and the Imperial interests of the British Empire.

BHOPAL.

THE internal affairs of this, the most important Mahomedan State in Central India, occupied a good deal of attention some months since; and, as there is now something more than a rift in the cloud, it may be well to bring before the reader the exact nature and extent of the mal-administration which at one time threatened very seriously to impair the prosperity of the State.

It would be difficult to find in the whole Peninsula a succession of rulers, who have been as consistently friendly to the British as those of this little State of some 8,000 square miles, and some 800,000 inhabitants. The Nawab was the only Indian Chief who, on the occasion of General Goddard's venturesome march across India in 1778, rendered us aid, and his successor earnestly desired to throw in his lot with us.

Our relations with the Bhopal ruler, at that time, do not much redound to our credit. Disregarding his previous services, we refused him protection; and, though our own interest led us to interfere in time to prevent so useful an ally being utterly crushed by the Mahrattas, it was not until 1817 that we admitted him into the charmed circle of treaty-contracting Powers.

Of late years Bhopal has been ruled by ladies, of whom the two last, Sikundar Begum and the present Shah Jehan Begum, seem to have occupied, towards their consorts, very much the position which, according to Gibbon, Zenobia occupied towards her lord, but not master, Odenathus. The Begum was everything, the Consort (by courtesy Nawab) nothing. Sikandar Begum succeeded to the Musnud in 1844, and reigned till her death in 1868. "She made," says Dr. Hunter in his "Gazetteer," "a name for herself by faithful service to the Government of India in the Mutiny, and by the great ability she displayed in the management of the State. She was succeeded by the present ruler, Shah Jehan Begum, who is no unworthy successor, and is distinguished by the same loyalty to the British Crown. Her first husband died in 1867, leaving her one daughter, Sultan Jehan Begum," heiress to the State. On his demise, Shah Jehan, following, in this, her mother's example, threw aside the restrictions of the Pardah, conducted business with vigour, and was always accessible. In recognition of her high administrative qualities and loyalty she was made a G.C.S.I. in 1872.

Shah Jehan Begum, however, contracted, in 1871, a second marriage with one Sadik Hossain, who is described as having been a seller of attar, and a man intellectually quite unworthy of an exalted alliance. It was, in fact, almost another case of Christina, the mother of the ex-Queen Isabella of Spain, and the stalwart corporal, whom she eventually created Duke of Rianzares. On her remarriage the Begum resumed the retirement imposed by Pardah, and the management of the State fell into the hands of the unworthy husband. The result might have been foreseen. It is no secret, wrote the Pioneer early in November, that for some time past things have not been going well in the Bhopal State, nor to what cause this mischief is attributable. Complaints to Government, repeated and serious, could not be ignored, and, after careful inquiry, turned out to be well founded.

It had not, of course, escaped notice that the Nawab Consort, Mahommed Sadik Hossein, had been usurping an authority which did not belong to him by ousting the responsible Ministers of the State, and filling all its offices with his own adherents. What appears to have been equally clearly made out is, that he used the power thus gained perniciously. The matter was, therefore, referred by Sir Lepel Griffin to the Government of India, who, after consulting the Secretary of State, determined that the mischief must be remedied. The remedy judged necessary was announced by Sir Lepel Griffin in open Durbar on Monday. It is, that the Consort shall be deprived of his title of Nawab, and of his salute of seventeen guns in British territory, and that he be excluded from all interference in the affairs of the State, with the understanding that any attempt to exercise such interference will entail the most serious consequences on himself. The Begum is to appoint a Minister under the approval of the Government of India, who will be responsible for the good government of the State. Her Highness the Begum expressed in Durbar her unreserved acceptance of the orders of the Government of India; and they have given unbounded satisfaction to all classes, the Nawab Consort having made himself equally unpopular with Mahomedans and Hindoos. Nevertheless, English people will not be able to avoid a feeling of regret that, necessary as it was, the Government should have been obliged to use the strong hand with a State which has been connected with it in the relation of friendship longer and more truly than any other in India.

Sadik Hossein, however, was not so complacent. The orders of the Government of India, depriving him of his title of Nawab and salute, and prohibiting him from interference in State affairs, were received by him with the determination to disobey them in every particular. His interference in every matter of State continued as constant as before, and the highest State officials continued to visit him with hardly a pretence of secrecy, while his influence over the Begum remained as great as ever. This open conflict with the orders of Government could not be allowed to continue. The Agent to the Governor-General signified to the Begum in unmistakable terms his resolve to insist upon the orders of the Government being carried out, and Sadik Hossein and the State officials were distinctly warned that continued disobedience would bring upon them the most serious consequences. In the end Sir Lepel Griffin caused two of Sadik's creatures who were known to have combined the functions of police officers and judges, and suspected of having, in this double capacity, tortured prisoners, to be tried by a British officer, on whose recommendation they, on being found guilty, were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment.

It was quite understood to be the Begum's wish that the new Minister should be an Englishman. We think that this was an ill-advised suggestion. As a contemporary rightly puts it:—

Had the Government desired to obtain a footing in Bhopal, to degrade the position of the ruler, and to direct its affairs at its will, there can be no reasonable doubt but that it would at once have accepted the proposal of the Begum and have appointed an English Minister, who from the circumstances of his position, would be obliged to look to the Government alone for support and direction.

The position of the State during all these troubles and uncertainties was a dignus vindice nodus, and the vindex had to be called in, in the person of Sir L. Griffin. He marched into Bhopal on February 11th, and the resettlement of affairs on a solid basis occupied him for nearly a fortnight. The relations between the Begum and the Governor-General's Agent are friendly and even cordial. Her Highness the Begum herself met Sir Lepel some two miles from the city, and paid him a private visit the same afternoon—acts of special courtesy which she had never before shown to any English officer.

We can hardly conceive a better nomination as Minister of a Mahomedan State than that of the gentleman who is now left in charge of the administration, Nawab Abd'ul Latif Khan, C.I.E., and there seems every reason to hope that, under his guidance, we may hear nothing of Bhopal but increased and increasing prosperity.

HERE is a curious reminiscence of old times in India, which we cull from Cassell's Illustrated History:—"Among those who were captured was a handsome young sergeant of the French marines, whose appearance and manner attracted the notice of Colonel Wagenheim, of our 15th Hanoverian Regiment, who took him to his tent, had his wounds dressed, and treated him with much kindness, for, though but a sergeant, he seemed much above his station, having been bred to the law, yet his parents were humble people of Pau. Long years after, when the army of France in its great career of conquest entered Hanover under Marshal Bernadotte, his levée was attended by Wagenheim, then an aged general officer. You have served, I understand, in India?" said Bernadotte. "Yes." "At Cuddalore?" "Yes." "Do you remember taking a wounded French sergeant there under your protection?" After a time the veteran called the episode to memory, adding, "He was a fine young man, and I should be glad to hear of his welfare." "I was that young French sergeant," replied the Marshal, "and now will omit no means of testifying my gratitude." And old Wagenheim lived to see the marine he had protected Prince and Marshal of the Empire, Prince of Ponte Corvo, Crown Prince of Sweden, and finally Charles John XIV., King of Sweden and Norway."

COSTS.

TO THE EDITOR.

"You are further to reflect, Mr. Woodcourt," observed Mr. Kenge, becoming dignified almost to severity, "that on the numerous difficulties, contingencies, masterly fictions, and forms of procedure in this great cause, there has been expended study, ability, eloquence, knowledge, intellect, Mr. Woodcourt, high intellect. For many years, the—a—I would say the flower of the Bar, and the—a—I would presume to add, the matured autumnal fruits of the Woolsack—have been lavished upon Jarndyce and Jarndyce."—Chap. LXV. of Dickens' "Bleak House."

SIR,—Unfortunately in India there is no public opinion, no united company of lawyers to check costs. Old ladies are at the mercy of their servants; in England an old lady can go from one solicitor to another until she can obtain justice, in India law is often divorced from justice.

The eyes of Englishmen would be opened if they could obtain a true account of the costs which have been already incurred by the Maharani of Bulrampur in Oudh. Her husband saved the life of Sir Charles Wingfield in the Mutiny, and was liberally rewarded by the British Government; he was made by Lord Canning the highest nobleman in the Province of Oudh.

In making his will he was most careful to take the best advice; the evidence of Major Erskine proves this.

His younger wife, not content with a large annuity, has forced the estate into the law courts, where it now remains.

Twelve barristers are engaged in the suit, one of them, a Native, charges one thousand rupees a day for every day in Court.

Wholly irrelevant questions have been raised in the course of this suit; the true question is a simple one—a question which can be easily answered by any sound lawyer, "To what is the younger Rani entitled?"

The difficulty of keeping pleaders and attorneys in order according to professional usage is, in India, very great. I have known a barrister put his services up to auction, to be bid for by an uncle and nephew who were quarrelling.

But Hindoo widows and orphans are helpless; they can neither conduct nor defend suits—they are plundered on all sides. Surely Government might interfere to save a portion of the estate of a Native gentleman whose loyalty towards the British in 1857 and 1858—years of rebellion—was so conspicuous? There is a curse upon those who devour widows' houses, and, for a pretence, make long prayers.—Your obedient servant,

March 18th.

SOCIETY OF ARTS, INDIAN SECTION.

At a meeting of this Section, last Friday evening, an interesting paper was read by Mr. William Simpson, entitled "Experiences on the Afghan Frontier." The chair was occupied by Major-General Sir Peter Lumsden. Having alluded to the importance of the railway now being constructed by the Russians in Central Asia, and which it was stated would be open to Merv early in April, Mr. Simpson went on to give many interesting details of a topographical and ethnological character. In the brief discussion that followed, Colonel Stewart, Mr. Saunders, and Mr. Martin Wood took part. In proposing a vote of thanks to the lecturer, Sir Peter Lumsden said, in reference to the line of railway mentioned in the paper, and which, for convenience, might be termed the Russian Central Asian Railway, that it must eventually prove a work of the utmost importance. It had been predicted by a distinguished Russian General that in the spring of this year it would be completed as far as Merv, and that by the close of the year it would reach the Oxus. As to the cost they had no precise information, but the estimate allowed for a length of 750 versts at 16,000 roubles per verst, which would bring the total to about 12,240,000 roubles; and if the estimate were not exceeded it would be one of the cheapest lines in the world. The fact was that there were very few cuttings, and only one bridge of any importance. There could be no doubt that it was bound to become the principal highway for traffic and travel in Central Asia. With regard to the cultivation and population of Merv and the adjacent districts, Russia had the faculty of carrying out the repopulation of deserted districts better than any other country; and he (Sir Peter Lumsden) had been assured that the Russians were determined to reclaim the land around Merv, Sarakhs, Penjeh, and other centres that had fallen out of cultivation. They had projected two great lines of canals for the purpose of still further developing the artificial irrigation that already existed on both sides of the Murghab, so as to increase the amount of soil under cultivation; and one of these canals would extend as far as the railway to which he had alluded.

THE scientific world in India is busy investigating the habits, &c., of that troublesome insect the mosquito. Would that it could be "improved" off the face of the earth!

GAZETTEER

OF THE
TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT
OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.

AND

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhail, &c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the detail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roper Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is an in necessary, as many persons have been deceived by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant's fraud was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1864.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & CO., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 12d. 2s. 9d. and 4s. 6d.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Service. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng'nd regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 12th March; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 10th March.

THE Times Correspondent, telegraphing from Mandalay on the 25th, reports Colonel Sladen's entertainment at a farewell dinner, and his departure from the Capital. The gallant Colonel considered that the garrison of Mandalay was being dangerously reduced shortly before his departure. Colonel Sladen also expressed his opinion that [the staff of civil officers should be increased, as it was desirable that the troops sent to attack Dacoits should, if possible, be accompanied by a civil officer acquainted with the Burmese language. At present there is reason to fear that owing to the ignorance of the language and people, the troops sometimes might mistake villagers for Dacoits.

THERE is at length a hope of our seeing the end of French intrigue at Mandalay, where it is announced on good authority that M. de Bouteiller, the French Consul, will leave, and the French Consulate at Mandalay will be abolished, as soon as the French claims of three and a half lakhs against the late Burmese Government are settled.

IN the opinion of the military authorities the condition of Upper Burmah continues slightly to improve on the whole. The present staff of civil officers is altogether inadequate for the work of reorganisation, and the want of officials seriously delays the settlement of the country.

ON the vacation of his command by General Prendergast, on the 31st of March, the following arrangements come into force:—Colonel White will command the field force in Upper Burma, with local rank of Major-General, with two Brigadiers, Hodding and Griffith. Colonel Dickens is to command Colonel Hodding's brigade pending his arrival.

KING THEBAW was to leave Madras for Ratnaghiri on the 27th.

SOME time since we expressed our conviction that, with Mr. Gladstone in power, Russia would be emboldened to make fresh demands in regard to the Afghan boundary, but we were hardly prepared to find our prognostications so soon verified. From Meshed (March 27) we hear that work is said to be practically at a standstill with the Afghan Demarcation Commission, in consequence of the Russian Commissioner having unexpectedly advanced claims which the British Commissioner will not entertain. The question has been referred to the respective Governments. Meantime the demarcation is stopped.

A further communication from Calcutta gives the Times the subjoined items as forming part of the Budget, which is described as "in great part a wail over the prospects of silver." We read:—

Some of the minor details of the Budget are of more or less interest. The concentration of troops at Rawul Pindi last year cost £50,000; the Delhi camp exercises are estimated to have cost £100,000; the extra subsidies for the Ameer of Afghanistan, £200,000; the Afghan Delimitation Commission, £190,100. The revenue of Upper Burmah during the first year of occupation is estimated at £665,000, and the expenditure at £749,500.

AT a recent meeting of the Central Committee of Lady Dufferin's Fund it was announced that the Prince and Princess of Wales had become vice-patrons; also that the Begum of Bhopal, in addition to the munificent gifts already presented, is about to establish a female ward, under a lady doctor, in Bhopal, and that the high priest of the Hindu temple of Baidyanath has offered gold and silver medals to female medical students belonging to Brahmin and other high castes. Lord Reay is to preside at a meeting at Bombay on Tuesday, for the purpose of forming a branch in the Western Presidency.

THE departure from India of Sir R. Garth, the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, has been universally regretted. Ill-health prevented his serving the entire period, but the full pension has been granted him in consideration of his services.

SIR. O. ST. JOHN has been transferred from Kashmir to Beloochistan.

How odd it is to see the result of looking at the same thing from different points of view! Here are the Rangoonites almost rabid because they have contributed so many lakhs to the Indian Exchequer; while, per contra, the entire Indian Native Press is crying out shame on the Government because they, the Natives of India, the very individuals who have been so much benefited by the annexation of part of Burma, are called on to pay for the absorption of the remainder, by which they will, in course of but a few years, still more largely profit.

WHEN a family comes into a country parish, how the "old-established" ladies observe the lady members of the new family! Especially, we much fear, in church. "Ought we to visit?" is the question usually raised, just outside the church porch, as the new comers make their way to their carriage—raised, of course, by the ladies: the husband or father not having a voice in the matter: he is "only a man," as Miss Marjoribanks sagely remarked. Well, ladies initiate and regulate all social intercourse here. In India this is, if possible, even more the case, and one can but welcome every indication of the willingness of English ladies to court the society of their Native sisters. Lady Dufferin, as is well known, has, with this end in view, devoted much time to the study of Hindustani, and it is pleasing to hear that the wife of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal converses fluently in Bengali.

Lord Dufferin has well earned any honours which Her Majesty may be pleased to confer on him. But we doubt if he will care for an archbishopric. Nolo archiepiscopari will, doubtless, be his feeling. Yet we read in a native contemporary:—

The Burmese are not devoid of humour. At a meeting held at Rangoon they agreed to submit a memorial to the Viceroy praying that they might be allowed to have an Archbishop or head over their religion, consequent on the dethronement of their king. According to the laws of British India, Lord Dufferin has become the Governor of Upper Burmah, and, according to those of the conquered country, he ought to become the head or, of Buddhism as it may be termed, the grand Lama, of Burmah. If the Burmese have sense they will carry out this suggestion.

THE Broad Arrow learns that Statute 23 and 24 Vict., c. 100, and other Acts relating to the Army in India, are not to be included in the Acts referred to the proposed Select Committee on Indian affairs.

WE cannot but think it a mistake not to recognise the services rendered by the Zhob expedition; they were very arduous, and to leave them wholly unnoticed seems very ill-placed parsimony.

IT is generally supposed that Lord Dalhousie will have the reversion of the Governorship of Madras in succession to Mr. Grant Duff. Up to the change of Government in England, it was all but understood that Sir H. D. Wolff would be Mr. Duff's successor. Lord Dalhousie is not wholly a novice in India, having spent some time shooting in the Terai along with his uncle, the late Sir Henry Ramsay, the Commissioner of Kumaon.

Chit Chat.

SIGNOR COMOTTO is a bold man. At the commencement of the Burmese war he was entrusted by King Theebaw with the arduous task of closing the Irrawaddy. "The worst thing that can happen to me," he wrote, "will be to become a prisoner of the English, and they will certainly respect me." After the campaign was finished he claims "that justice for which the British Government are so renowned." This is indeed "running with the hare and hunting with the hounds."

"THERE can be no burking the fact," writes the Pioneer, "that the Russians are displaying extraordinary activity and enterprise in dealing with their newly-acquired possessions in Central Asia." Doubtless—but whoever save a doctrinaire ignoramus thought it would be otherwise?

It seems to be admitted on all hands that something must be done to bring the errant rupee to a proper sense of its dignity. So Bi-metallism is just at present in the ascendant.

A CHARMING tale is current in the London Clubs anent the zenana missions. A gushing young and enthusiastic daughter of Eve, dying with anxiety to befriend the "good cause," be-thought herself that she would try and learn a little about the enterprise which had filled her maiden bosom with dreams of oppression, cruelty, and wrong, but for the life of her she could not find "Zenana," or any place resembling it, in the atlas! She was in despair, and well she might be at her own ignorance.

CEYLON produces 50,000,000 lbs. of tea per annum, as compared with 70,000,000 lbs. exported from India. Rather a formidable competitor is the tiny isle. The leaves of the shrub, it is said, can be gathered all the year round, but surely this is a questionable advantage, since trees, like human beings, need rest to recuperate their powers; and if this be so, what will happen a few years hence? But "Carpe diem" is the motto of the Singha-lese.

ON the occasion of the Bombay races the authorities bethought themselves that the course should look smart, so they gave orders that the Grand Stand and Stewards' Stand should be painted, but the usual "how not to do it" might well have been the order of the day, for the task was not finished till a few hours before the meeting, so that as people thronged to witness the racing they carried with them on their clothes huge daubs of green paint. It is bad enough on these occasions to lose one's money and one's temper without the further annoyance of having everything in the way of costume ruined by thoughtless stupidity on the part of those responsible for the comfort and welfare of the "upper ten."

"A MAN always writes with greater freedom about a subject of which he is entirely ignorant." This is rather a neat way of putting things.

WHILE England has witnessed the humiliating spectacle of the richest and finest city in the world handed over to anarchy and plunder for two whole days, Bombay has been the scene of quite a different line of action. In the Western Capital the police force turned out in considerable strength to remove from the town "a wretched, harmless, half-clothed, and apparently mad man, who is occasionally seen begging about the streets." The shouting and babel of tongues which accompanied this display of power is represented to have been disgraceful. The pendulum is always in motion. At one time impotent weakness is the order of the day, at another blustering swagger takes the place of decorous propriety.

A CURIOUS case happened recently at Bombay. A dealer had 10,000 small pictures in his shop, and two of the number were considered to be beyond the pale of propriety; so he was indicted. He pleaded that such a ridiculous proportion could not fairly lay him open to the charge brought against him. The authorities, however, thought otherwise, and sentenced him to pay a fine of £20 and undergo two months' imprisonment. Bombay is, indeed, virtuous!

Of late years men in the Civil Service have found it difficult to put by for a rainy day; at any rate, till towards the close of their career, when, should a highly-paid office fall to their lot, some opportunity would be afforded of saving money for the support of their families when the hand of death has swept away the bread-winner of the home. But now it is proposed to reduce the allowances of the prizes of the Service, which means, in plain language, that none but persons of more or less private means can afford to take service in India. This, forsooth, is the tendency of a democratic age, when it is preached in the lanes and bye-ways that every son of Adam is as good as his neighbour, and that no one must be born with rights or advantages over his fellows. So all the world must be fools, paupers, thoughtless, imprudent, sickly, and ill-shaped; to be otherwise would be to violate the dead-level of democracy.

INDIA THROUGH GERMAN SPECTACLES.

The subjoined, which we extract from the St. James's Gazette, may be recommended as profitable reading to Messrs. Cotton, Blunt, and other depreciators of British work in India.

In his new book, "Trough the British Empire" (published by Mr. John Murray), the Baron von Hübner gives a decidedly flattering estimate of the results of English rule in India.

"Materially speaking, India has never been as prosperous as she is now. The appearance of the natives, for the most part well-clothed, and of their villages and well-furnished cottages, and of their well-cultivated fields, seems to prove this. In their bearing there is nothing servile; in their behaviour towards their English masters there is a certain freedom of manner and a general air of self-respect; nothing of that abject deference which strikes and shocks new-comers in other Eastern countries. I have no means of comparing the natives of to-day with the natives of former generations; but I have been able to compare the populations who owe direct allegiance to the Empress with the subjects of the feudatory princes. For example, when you cross the frontier of Hyderabad, the climate, the soil, the race are the same as those you have just quitted; but the difference between the two States is remarkable, and altogether to the advantage of the Presidency of Madras or of Bombay. The relations of the civil and military officers with the people leave nothing to be desired. If proof were needed to show how deeply rooted among the populations is English prestige, I would quote the fact that throughout the peninsula the native prefers, in civil and still more in criminal cases, to be tried by an English judge. It would be impossible, I think, to render a more flattering testimony to British rule. But no one, even if he looks with the eyes of a pessimist, which I do not, and makes a large allowance for the infirmities and weaknesses inherent in human nature, can deny that the British India of our days presents a spectacle which is unique and without a parallel in the history of the world."

What, asks the Baron, has wrought these miracles? His answer is—

"The wisdom and the courage of a few directing statesmen, the bravery and the discipline of an army composed of a small number of Englishmen and a large number of natives, led by heroes; and lastly, and I will venture to say principally, the devotion, the intelligence, the courage, the perseverance, and the skill, combined with an integrity proof against all temptation, of a handful of officials and magistrates who govern and administer the Indian Empire."

The native press, Baron von Hübner thinks, does very much more harm than good:—

"The native press, now perfectly free, is merely an effect and a corollary of the system adopted in the matter of public education. Macaulay thought that it did more good than harm. Such is not the opinion of even the most Liberal officials whom I have heard discuss this subject. It is evident that a free press presupposes a public opinion, which does not exist in India, and moreover a public opinion which, though partly formed by the press, is capable of controlling and checking it. Besides, a free press is an anomaly in a country devoid of parliamentary institutions and governed by a bureaucracy responsible to its heads and not to the country. Of the native press in general little good is said. Intemperance of language, a great confusion of ideas, coupled with extreme ignorance of the matters handled, characterise, with few exceptions, native journalism. It is accused also of getting money by means of intimidation. The "hush-money" extorted from the rich zemindars, who have peccadilloes on their conscience or are unjustly charged with them, would form the bulk of the profits reaped by the popular newspapers. So unfavourable is the universal opinion among Anglo-Indians, that a stop would have been put long ago to these scandals were it not for the innate aversion of the English to condemn without a trial, and, so far as the Liberals are concerned, for their attachment to the principles of their school, among which the liberty of the press holds a foremost place. Lord Lytton, after his arrival, by means of an Order in Council, put a check to the excesses of the press. Lord Ripon lost no time in repealing the law enacted by his predecessor. In the main, every one agrees in saying that the press, even from a political point of view, exercises a bad influence on those who are able to read."

A GAZETTEER OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.*

Neither from the title-page nor from the Preface does the purchaser of this really excellent work learn the full value of his acquisition. The book purports to be a revision of Thornton's Gazetteer of the Countries under the Government of India. It is this, but it is a great deal more than this; for, besides a full list (at pp. 1003-32) of the various railway-stations, and of ports (pp. 1033-47), it comprises (pp. 1048-1070) a complete Gazetteer to Ceylon, which is, of course, nowise administratively connected with India.

Macaulay said of the survivors of the Black Hole of Calcutta that their own mothers would not have recognised them. We may most safely aver that Mr. Thornton, the parent of this Gazetteer, would not, in its present form, be able to recognise his own hantling; but for a different reason, for, whereas Holwell and those of his fellow-sufferers who survived were emaciated beyond recognition, the Gazetteer has greatly increased in size. Let us take, at random, one letter. It shall be R, which contains the names derived, or compounded, from Rae, Rai, Raj, Ram, Rana, Rani, Rao, &c. R, too, is one of the letters with which, as an initial, scarcely any Europeanised form of spelling has very greatly interfered; it is one, therefore, which may be taken as a fair specimen. Now, under this letter R, in Thornton's last edition, we have 443 references, whereas in the present revised issue there are no less than 709, an increase which fairly indicates the greatly augmented scope of the present volume.

Naturally enough, such a multiplicity of countries, rivers, towns, and villages could not be described at great length; otherwise the work would have run into several tomes, or, if kept within the space of a single volume, would have been more unwieldy than the Post-office Directory. It was, therefore, unavoidable that the matter in hand should be compressed, that all redundancies should be excised, and that the really needful information should be conveyed in the fewest possible words consistent with lucidity and precision.

This has been done, and well done; yet nothing material is omitted. The boundaries, area in square miles, and population, of every Province, division, and district, are given; the exact distance of each town or village from the more important cities; the latitude and longitude of nearly every place is assigned: the position of the Thanas, so important to the traveller, indicated; the reader is informed, which are the principal products of each part of the country, and, in cases where they can be distinctly stated—as, for instance, opium in the Indore state—those of every Native Principality, are also noted.

A Gazetteer is nothing if not precise as well as exhaustive; and a work on which, in small things, we cannot rely, is apt to excite mistrust when we come to deal with larger matters. It used to be said that that wondrous abstraction, "the law," felt a sublime disregard for trifles. (De minimis non curat lex.) Now we look on it as an especial merit of this book, viewed as a work of reference, that it pays particular attention to what we may fairly call infinitesimals. We find, for instance, such entries as the following:

Doddabbur, a village in Coorg (Madras). Population 34.

Mallaballi, a village in Coorg. Population 27; the two together not approaching in number the denizens of a single flat of any of the Peabody buildings. Any London workhouse would supply inhabitants for some scores of such villages; yet the latter are not insignificant enough to escape the chiefs who take notes on behalf of a Gazetteer.

In the same manner we find that Protean term "State,"—which, according to the comity of Indian official correspondence, is applicable alike to the enormous dominions of the Nizam of the Deccan, and to the few, possibly barren, acres which surround the half ruinous fortlet of some petty lordling—duly distinguishing every little territory which can lay the smallest claim to it. For instance:—

"Rawai, State in Punjab. Area 3 square miles. Population (1881) 752."

"Magori, State in Mahi Kantha, Bombay, paying a yearly tribute of £9 to the Rájá of Edar. Population (1881) 3,076."

The information afforded regarding that part of India which will, for many a year to come, be that on which Englishmen will have to keep their attention fixed, the North Western Frontier, is most accurate, and certainly as full as could be expected, when it is borne in mind, that mere detail is wholly foreign to the purpose of the work. Of Kashmir, the Suleiman range, Kabul and its river, Kandahar, and so on enough is stated to convey to the reader that amount of general information which will enable him the more readily and profitably to consult more elaborate works for minor details.

Compression being necessarily the mot d'ordre, we must not be surprised that even the Presidency towns have not a very large space allotted to them, though Bombay seems, compared with the other two, to have received somewhat scant courtesy in this respect.

Of course the everlasting difficulty of spelling comes to the fore in full force. The intention of the editors has been to adhere to the system of transliteration, if so it may be termed, adopted by Dr. W. W. Hunter, a system which is probably as good as any other which has been prominently brought forward. But they have, in our opinion most wisely, deviated from this mode of spelling in the case of well-known names, such as Cawnpoor, Lucknow, Meeran Meer, Mysore, and others. But, even thus, the nicest discrimination will at times scarcely suffice to avoid at least an apparent inconsistency, for at page 517 we find, in its due place, "Lakhnau, a village of Etawah" (precisely the same name), spelt in a manner which would have delighted the heart of that great Oriental purist, Mr. E. B. Eastwick. However, the difficulty has, for all practical purposes, been surmounted by entering the name of a state, or a place, under every probable mode of spelling. As, for instance, the little hill state of Bussahir, a late chieflet of which indulged in zulum to such an extent as to invoke the interference of the then Viceroy (Lawrence, if we correctly remember). No human being would think of looking for this name as Bashahr, under which an account of the little territory is to be found; and we are accordingly, under Bussahir, referred to Bashahr, the new way of spelling the name—similarly "Mahomed Khan Ka Tanda" refers us for information to "Tanda Muhammad Khan"—while the description of the well known province is given under the old form of Mysore, to which we are referred if we venture to "commit flirtation" with the new-fangled, though "authoritative" form Ma'sur. In one or two instances this has been inadvertently omitted, as in the well-known Mahomdee, in Oudh, (where James Thomason and other Europeans were massacred in 1857) which figures only as Muhamdi. These are, however, exceptions to the excellent system of cross-references which is a marked feature of the work. This matter of spelling will always be a crux in transliterating Oriental words into European tongues. The French have, perhaps, been the greatest sinners in this respect. (Djedda for Jedda, and Tonkin for Tong-King, not to mention others innumerable, are specimens of their skill in rendering a name etymologically unrecognisable.) But we have run them somewhat close, and it is a great merit of this Gazetteer that it has been so successful in minimising the "confusion of tongues" by the judiciously arranged system of cross-references, of which we have above given one or two instances. The Editors have produced a book of reference at once valuable for the information which it contains, and practically useful on account of the clear manner in which this is placed before the reader. The typography, too, differs, greatly for the better, from all previous editions of Thornton's Gazetteer.

LIFE OF GENERAL SIR CHARLES NAPIER, G.C.B.*

Himself a remarkable man, the hero of this Biography belonged to a remarkable family. "His maternal grandfather, the second Duke of Richmond, was called from college to marry Lady Sarah Cadogan, daughter of Marlborough's favourite general—a match arranged between the parents to cancel a gambling debt." To this circumstance the world owes its statesman, Charles James Fox, and its three generals, Sir George, Sir William, and Sir Charles Napier, a galaxy of talent and genius seldom equalled, perhaps never surpassed.

Charles James Napier was born at Whitehall, London, on the 10th August, 1782, but received his education at a town on the Liffey, a few miles from Dublin. Following the fashion of the time amongst the aristocracy of the eighteenth century, he obtained a commission in the 33rd Regiment when only twelve years of age, and shortly afterwards exchanged into the 89th. His first experience of war was gained in the insurrection of 1798, when he had to face the stern and horrible realities of civil war. In the autumn of 1800 he was appointed to a lieutenancy in the 95th, or Rifle Corps, and in 1803 was placed on the staff of his cousin, General Fox, commanding the London district. But fortune had great things in store for him, and in 1808 he was ordered to join the 1st battalion of the 50th Regiment, then at Lisbon, thereupon the young lieutenant soon found himself in the midst of the Peninsula War. Fearfully wounded, he fell into the hands of the French as a prisoner of war, and for a time was in enforced idleness, but an exchange took place, and the young warrior once again joined the fray, till a bullet tore away a portion of his left jaw, and he was carried off the field of battle, to quote his own words, "alive, but not merry." On recovering, he received the command of the 102nd Regiment, then stationed at Bermuda, an appointment which he vacated on proceeding to the seat of war in America. Space precludes more than a bare mention of his employment in the Ionian Islands and in the northern district of England, and we pass on to the scenes of his triumphs, the plains of India, in which country he landed in December, 1841, to assume the command at Poona. Times were then indeed critical. The Afghan disaster had unhinged the Native mind, and of the many regions where mischief was seething Scind stood prominent. It is no part of our design to sketch the causes which led to the invasion of that country, and its eventual incorporation within the domains which own the sway of the Lord Sahib Bahadur, who sits on the throne in the City of Palaces. Still less is it our intention to re-open the dispute which for years ran high between the supporters of Outram, the "Bayard of India," and Napier, the conqueror of Scind—Sir Charles Napier, as we must now call him, for he had been gazetted a K.C.B. It will suffice to say that, judged from a military point of view, the General's actions merit the highest praise, and it may be questioned whether the annals of war contain examples of more profound skill, more hazardous daring, or more successful prowess.

Nor will many be found ready to question that the subsequent government of the country, after its annexation, was masterly in the highest degree, and of a nation to give the soldier-ruler a just claim to be enrolled as one of the greatest administrators in a country which stands pre-eminent in the scroll of time as the land of able rulers and successful governors. For his success in Scind he was created a G.C.B. and assigned the colonelcy of the 22nd Regiment.

Less known to fame, but, from a military point of view, scarcely less worthy of admiration, was his successful attempt to bring into subjection the hill robbers of the northern frontier of the district which he administered. For 600 years it had been the boast of these redoubtable miscreants that not a solitary European soldier, from amongst the many who had attacked their forts, had ever lived to tell the tale, not one but left his whitened bones to proclaim the folly of all attempts to oust the plunderers from their natural fortresses. But Sir Charles Napier, by forced marches of incredible rapidity, by attacks seemingly hopeless, and against overwhelming numbers, inspired the Chiefs with such awe that in the course of a few months they laid down their arms and became peaceable neighbours, and in some instances trusted allies.

Napier's part in the Sikh war was confined to a ride of 1,800 miles from Kurrachee to Lahore, for ere he arrived the battle of Sohraon had humiliated the followers of the Guru, and for a time humbled the aspirations of the proud Runjeet Singh, the Lion of the Punjab.

Ill-health now forced Sir Charles Napier home to recruit his constitution, but ere long troubles once more arose in the East, and public opinion forced the Court of Directors to send the veteran warrior once again to sunny India as Commander-in-Chief, but for a second time Fortune deserted him. On his arrival at Calcutta on 6th May, 1849, he found the war was over, Lord Gough, the heroic leader of no less heroic soldiers, having wiped out the disasters which befell his earlier attempts, and Sir Charles Napier had to content himself with the routine work devolving upon the head of the army; but things were not pleasant—the Commander-in-Chief did not get on pleasantly with the irritable and imperious little nobleman who ruled the destinies of the Indian peoples, and the veteran warrior could ill brook the treatment he received at Lord Dalhousie's hands, so towards the end of 1850 he resigned and returned to England, where he lived in more or less seclusion till his death, which occurred in the spring of 1853.

Such is the tale told to the public by Mr. Napier Bruce, who has performed his task with conscientious fidelity. Of course, following the example of all biographers, he indulges more or less in hero-worship, but not to an extent to occasion weariness, or give rise to disgust; and perhaps he may be pardoned for a little enthusiasm in pleading the cause of one of the finest military characters of modern times—one of a triad of brothers who have immortalised the profession of arms by examples of daring courage, consummate skill, and unimpeachable uprightness.

A STORY OF ACTIVE SERVICE IN FOREIGN LANDS.*

The writer gives us, in these Extracts from his letters home at the time of the Crimean war, a good account of the life of an army Assistant-Surgeon in the days before our struggle with Russia had brought it within the knowledge of every one who cared to look into facts, that our army medical organisation really had scarcely an existence, and that, if every officer employed in it did not do exactly what was right in his own eyes, this was to be attributed to a sense of duty, rather than to any efficient Departmental control.

The story of the Crimean war, every result attained, by which has been lost by peddling and timorous action on the part of successive Foreign Secretaries, has almost passed into the domain of what may be called ancient history. Yet there are lessons, and these neither few nor insignificant, to be learnt from the "horrible and heartrending" sufferings endured by our soldiery on the barren and exposed promontory which overlooks at once Sebastopol, the then magnificent arsenal, and Balaklava, the little port which we chose for our base of operations.

It may be assumed that green coffee, to whitewash the administrators of which a Chelsea mutual-puffery Board was convened, has gone "where the good niggers go"—at least, we have of late heard of no exactly similar delinquency. But the days of bad ammunition and bad weapons are not extinct, nor are they likely to become so, as long as members of the Government are interested in firms of contractors. It is suggestive, on this point, to read that (p. 127) "our gunners were obliged to stop firing from the large mortars last night; the fuses . . . caused the shells to burst as they left the muzzles of the mortars, and several of our men were badly wounded. These fuses, which were recently sent out, are said to have been made in 1810—only forty-five years ago!"

Our author had never seen war, so he must be excused for thinking (p. 227) that 23,000 British troops had never been reviewed before. We think that Lord Raglan, had the "Edinburgh Boy" ever seen anything but his Lordship's back, could have told him a somewhat different story.

We find the same contrast, between Russian expeditions procedure and our own dilatoriness, in the Crimean days, as we see at the present moment so deplorably exhibited in the "Railway Race" towards Afghanistan. This time it is as to work done during an armistice. "They (Russians) seem (p. 132) to have done as much in those four hours as we generally do in as many months." Whatever the low state of Russian civilisation, it were vain to deny to Russian officers a knowledge of the value of time, in which we are far behind them.

Turning to a more pleasant subject, we find an allusion to Russian music which we do not remember to have seen before, and which reminds one, as to the distribution of the notes, of the singing in the Russian cathedrals, where, as is well known, each singer uses, as called for, only the four or five best notes of his "register." One of the bands, we read, "is said to be entirely made up of cows' horns, each tuned to a single note. The conductor stands in front, and points his bâton to each horn as he wants a certain note, which is sounded, and so on to each note in succession till the theme is completed."

Here we must conclude our notice of a book which, though it aims only at conveying youthful impressions, yet contains much which is interesting, and, more, which is—to those who know how history repeats itself, and can read between the lines—highly instructive. The "Edinburgh Boy" writes a pleasant and unaffected style, and his book is well worth reading.

COFFEE, ITS CULTIVATION AND PROFIT.†

Coffee, indigenous to Africa, and deriving its well-known name from the district of Kaffa, where it was first cultivated, and whence it, in the first instance reached Arabia, as "blood-red keweh" (p. 2), has been the subject of many a monograph, of which we had occasion, some time since, to notice one by Mr. C. F. Van Delden Laerne (ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, 1885, p. 558), perhaps the most exhaustive work of the kind which has ever appeared. The volume before us does not attempt to traverse the wide field occupied by Mr. Laerne. Its object is confined to being a practical guide to those who may entertain the idea of devoting their time and money to Coffee-planting, and it might not inappropriately have been entitled "A Handbook for intending Coffee-planters," as which we think it excellent. Such persons will here find, in few well-digested words, the fullest information as to the countries most favourable to their enterprise, the regulations as to grants of land which obtain in each of these countries, the peculiar soil to be selected, and the way to treat it during its transmutation from virgin forest land into a productive plantation. The remarks on the labour to be obtained—always one of the thorns in a young planter's sides—are carefully considered: and, though Mr. Arnold's experience would seem chiefly to have been acquired in Southern India and Ceylon, are generally, so far as we are aware, applicable elsewhere.

Much of the ill-success which has operated as a heavy blow and sore discouragement to new hands disposed to engage in this interesting, and, when intelligently pursued, profitable, path in life, seems to us to be due to an insane tendency to take far more land than the available capital justifies. Our English proverb, "Out your coat according to your cloth," is well matched by the Canarese saying of which Mr. Arnold reminds us (p. 57), "Stretch your legs according to your blanket," and enforces the remark of an old planter which he quotes: "Forty times out of fifty the true reason of failure and disappointment in this branch of agriculture is due to more land being taken in hand than the limits of available capital warrant."

Our author gives, at p. 216, a balance-sheet showing the estimated expenses and returns, during three years, of bringing into bearing 200 acres of Forest land. When we mention that the return is 14,000 rupees, against an outlay of 38,880 rupees, to which latter sum must be added the cost of the land, the interest on money laid out, and a fair amount of remuneration for personal supervision, it will be seen that the first years necessitate a very considerable outlay. With these figures before us, we cannot be surprised at the strong recommendation that, unless a man possesses capital at the rate of at least (p. 223) £20 for every acre he is going to open in three years, he had better "by advertising, or through friends, get a berth as an assistant on a garden in Southern India, Fiji, or anywhere else, and serve three years' apprenticeship. During those three years learn," he adds, "everything you can, important or trivial, not forgetting the local language. By the end of that time you will be well qualified to judge whether it is safe to invest your capital in forest, . . . to take over a half-opened garden from a discontented neighbour, or to throw in your lot with some pleasant and clever 'chum,' and make your fortunes over a joint estate." It is, the author states, "easier to get a berth while still in England than when actually on the spot." It is not wholly alien to this matter of the employment of capital to cite Mr. Arnold on the question of returns. "Profits," he tells us, "depend on two things chiefly—the selling price of clean coffee, and the weight yielded per acre;" cynically adding, "quality, we are sorry to say, has not much to do with the matter."

This Coffee-planter's Vade-mecum is a full, yet tersely and well written, guide to this branch of agriculture, and should be in the hands of every one who desires to devote himself to it. The illustrations, too, are clear, and convey to the eye an accurate conception of the machinery and other objects which they are intended to represent.

LADY RIVERS THOMPSON, says a Bengal paper, accompanied by her two daughters, honoured the Maharanee of the Maharajah Norendra Krishna with their presence at her residence, at six P.M., last Friday evening, where they were received by the Maharanee with due honour. Lady Thompson conversed freely and fluently in Bengalee with her noble hostess, and partook of refreshments provided in the Native style, with which the guests were greatly pleased. The Maharanee decorated them with garlands prior to their departure for Belvedere. Lady Thompson, in her familiarity with the Bengalee language, has an advantage over most European ladies in being able to converse freely with Native ladies of this country. It would be a decided advantage to the general community if this great bar of language could be overcome. Native ladies are not permitted to "come out," and are exceedingly grateful for visits paid to them where conversation is possible. It is this restricted intercourse often that is answerable for any misunderstandings which more intimate knowledge would often prevent.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

A YEAR in which the value of the rupee has been reduced to the unprecedented extent of more than a fourth of its value (the last India Council drafts having been sold at a fraction under 1s. 6d.), cannot be said to have closed auspiciously for Indian revenues; and it is not surprising that Sir A. Colvin's Budget for the financial year 1886-87 should strike our contemporary the Times as being by no means pleasant reading. For 1884-85, the first of the three years with which an Indian Budget usually deals, there was a deficit of 71 lakhs of rupees.

But, as the Statist reminds us, hereby hangs a tale. It had been stated in last year's Budget that land-tax to the extent of about 50 lakhs, properly belonging to 1884-85, had been collected the year before, and that another portion of land-tax, amounting to £344,000, had been postponed to the following year because of the partial failure of the monsoon, and the consequent damage to the crops in the presidencies of Bombay and Madras. Furthermore, a sum of £593,000 more than was set down in the estimate had to be provided on account of the opium expenditure. The opium crop of the year was extraordinarily productive, and it involved a much larger expenditure than had been anticipated, but the expenditure was, of course, merely provisional. It will be more than repaid when the crop is marketed. Adding the three sums together, we find that considerably more than a million and a quarter had been lost to the year 1884, either by anticipation or by postponement, or by outlay on account of a crop that was not marketed within the year. In reality, therefore, if the accounts were properly apportioned, the year 1884-85 yielded a large surplus instead of an apparent deficit.

For the ensuing year, 1885-6, the original Budget estimate showed an expected clear surplus of £508,000. The revised estimate, which deals not with expectations but with facts, changed this surplus into a deficit of £2,890,800, a result largely due to what certain papers are pleased to call the "Russian scare," and, in a minor degree, to the Burmese expedition. Yet, compared with the budget estimates published a year ago, the revenue shows an increase of £2,817,419, which is extremely satisfactory considering all the circumstances (the more so that the considerable proportion of the revenue for which we usually look to salt was not, during the past year, realised) while the real increase in the expenditure is £5,411,773. For the ensuing year, that on which we are now entering, a surplus is expected. The prospects of the opium crop are exceptionally good, the net opium revenue being taken at £6,577,100, but the operation of the new Opium Convention with China, which will probably take effect during the ensuing year, must be watched with some anxiety. The estimated effect of this convention was a loss to the Indian revenue of about £250,000 a year, a loss which has, of course, been taken into account in calculating the year's opium revenue. This revenue, even so, appears to be small for a good season—a result presumably due in part to the fact, that a very large opium crop does not exert an immediately beneficial influence on revenue, involving as it does an increase in the charges which must be met before the opium is sold.

The surplus is but a small one, something under twenty lakhs, while, to increase it, the local treasuries are to be depleted to the extent of more than forty lakhs, a measure the expediency of which strikes us as at least doubtful.

We are glad that it has been finally determined to abandon the fiction that a rupee which fetches less than 1s. 6d. is worth 2s., and to recognise this fact plainly in the accounts, which are to be recast for the purpose. This may, and indeed will, cause some little difficulty in comparing the revenue results of past and future years; but it was high time to acknowledge facts as they are, and to repudiate what was at best an obsolete figment.

We have never disguised our conviction that finance is the weak point of the Indian Government, both at Calcutta and at Westminster. We have more than once had occasion to point out errors of no common magnitude in the Budget Estimates. Our City contemporary, the Statist, writes on this subject as follow:—"Speaking," last March, "within a few weeks of the end of the financial year, when the Finance Minister ought to have had before him the results for eleven months, and ought to have known how the receipts were coming in during March, he estimated the deficit at £716,000. Now, we are told that 'the increased railway, salt, and land revenue receipts during March, 1885, account for the diminution of the deficit anticipated in the Budget.' If the accounts this year had been made up as they were last year, it appears, in fact, that the deficit would have amounted to less than £150,000. There is therefore an improvement of considerably more than half a million sterling in the result as shown by the revised estimates published in the middle of last March. Clearly there must be want of proper control somewhere in the Indian Treasury when mistakes of this kind can occur year after year; for, last year, it will be recollected we had an example of a still greater discrepancy between the revised estimates and the actual results, and only a few years ago we all remember how glaring an error was committed with regard to the Afghan expenditure."

At the same time it is but just to remember that the embarrassment caused to financiers, in endeavouring fairly to forecast the income and expenditure of a vast Empire, by the fluctuating value of silver, is overwhelming, and indefinitely increases the uncertainty which must, at best, attend the most careful anticipations. We need not, therefore, be surprised to find this matter prominently referred to in Sir A. Colvin's Budget. The Times' Correspondent telegraphs, under date March 25th:—The financial statement, which was published yesterday, commences by reviewing the difficulties arising from the uncertainty regarding the future of silver, which Sir A. Colvin describes as one of the most vital questions with which the Indian Government ever had to deal. No forethought, he says, no prudence, or shaping of policy, will enable the Government to ensure any approach to a stable equilibrium while silver remains in its present condition.

Meanwhile the accounts have been recast, with the object of distributing the exchange among the different heads to which it appertains. Again, with reference to the silver difficulty, Sir A. Colvin mentions that the Indian Government is pressing upon the Secretary of State the absolute necessity in the interests of India, and of the Empire in general, of seeking, in concert with the European Powers and the United States, some solution of that difficulty. Until such solution is obtained, he says it cannot be too clearly understood that accuracy in the general forecast in the Budget is entirely beyond the control of any financial authority in or out of India, and the most carefully prepared calculations may be upset long before the year is out by the addition—as last year—of a million to the expenditure, an addition before which the Indian Government is entirely powerless, and must always be powerless, while the efforts to bring about an understanding regarding silver remain unsuccessful."

A further difficulty may be in store for the Indian Government, at a time when every pseudo-humanitarian craze can count on unreasoning supporters, in a motion, threatened in the House of Commons, condemnatory of Indian opium as a source of revenue. The House is to be asked to affirm "that it is expedient that the Indian Government should cease to be concerned with the cultivation of the poppy and with its manufacture into opium, and that it should use its powers to prohibit the cultivation of the poppy in British India except in quantities sufficient to satisfy the medical demand." As a contemporary well observes, if this motion is carried, the finances of India will be embarrassed beyond all recovery. The well-known fact is that Indian opium is a luxury in the Chinese market. To prohibit its growth would do little or nothing to lessen the consumption of opium in China. Native grown opium of an inferior quality would be used in its stead, and that would be all.

We cannot suppose that so irrational a motion can have any chance of succeeding. "It would be as sensible to attempt to serve the cause of temperance in this country by prohibiting the importation of first-class claret, while allowing the manufacture and sale of ardent spirits to proceed unchecked. If Parliament chooses to cut off some six or seven millions from the year's revenue of India, it is bound to make good the loss, and the English people, however morally inclined, would hardly be content to go on paying the necessary sum, when they found out that the opium trade with China and the East had passed into other hands, and that the moral benefits they were in quest of were as far off as they had ever been." On this subject, then, we need say no more. But the silver question is year by year forcing itself more to the front, and no Government is doing its duty to India which does not exert itself to the utmost to bring—by what "metallism" soever—matters into a more satisfactory condition.

A NEW ROUTE TO THE EAST.

THE Muscovites have not been idle in the construction of their Central Asian, or Transcaspian, Railway, and some of our Indian papers are already speculating on the time when the rapid advance of their line may lead to the extension to Kandahar of our own—an extension for which we are glad to see that rails are to a great extent in hand—and to the possibility of travelling to England in ten days, of which but three (one on the Caspian and two on the Black Sea) would be performed otherwise than on terra firma.

But it is not of this line of communication that we wish to speak. What is wanted is one which must be independent, as far as may be, of any enemy, especially of Russia. We do not regard the route via the Suez Canal as being such a line. We know from his published works that Sir Thomas Symonds, speaking on the naval side of the question, does not so regard it. And years since, in 1881 (long before the French had acquired a predominant position in Madagascar), the late General C. G. Gordon, then at the Mauritius, thus wrote, looking at the matter from a soldier's point of view:—"This place is very interesting, and must be important again, for we can never consider the Canal more than a second-rate communication—it can be so easily stopped."

The route to which we refer is one which, within the last year or two, would have been wholly impracticable. It is, in brief, to cross the American Continent, utilizing for that purpose the facilities afforded by the Canadian Pacific railway, and to subsidize a line of mail steamers of sufficient speed to traverse the long Pacific passage at the rate of, say fifteen knots an hour. The advantages of this route, as one available, and deserving of support, on business grounds—the Post Office not being much given to sentimental considerations—have been in a manner recognized by the Government in soliciting tenders for a Mail service between Vancouver and Hong Kong. The Canadian Pacific Company are prepared, if enabled by a Government subsidy to provide the necessary vessels, to build them under Admiralty superintendence, so as to be specially adapted for military and naval purposes, to convey troops across the Continent at actual cost, and greatly to abbreviate the duration of the through journey. The proposal is, that whereas the present quickest service (via Brindisi) from London to Hong Kong is performed in from 34 to 37 days, according to season; to Shanghai in 39 to 42 days; and to Yokohama in 43 to 46 days; by the Canadian route, if the Railway Company's offer is accepted, the time to Hong Kong will be 29½ to 31½ days; to Shanghai 28 to 30 days; and to Yokohama 24 to 26 days. It is, at least, clear that the matter is worth some attention, if only on the principle of having two strings to our bow. We have now only one string, and that one is liable to snap at any unexpected moment. Often as we have insisted on it, we believe that few people thoroughly realise the risk involved by trusting so entirely, as we now do, to the Suez Canal for our commercial and military intercourse with the East. In time of war it would, of course, be more than likely that the Canal would be blocked by the intentional sinking of a vessel; but even in times of peace an unpreventable accident may at any moment bring about the same result, and for many weeks demoralise all our communications with the East.

What this would mean our readers may imagine; and we are glad that the question of this alternative way of travel to the East was brought before the House of Lords some few days since. Of course no one ever has got, or ever will get, a straightforward answer on any conceivable subject from Lord Granville, so we are not much surprised that Lord Harrowby was put off with official platitudes. We hope that the scheme may not fall to the ground between the two stools of the Imperial and Dominion Governments; but that it may, if even tentatively, but for a sufficient term of years, receive a fair trial.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL &amp; CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessional guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.
